KERRIGAN, J. The plaintiff having recovered a verdict against the defendants as administrator and administratrix of the estate of Catherine Ross, deceased, the defendant James Carrick served and filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial. His codefendant, being satisfied with the verdict, did not join in the motion. The motion was granted, and the plaintiff appeals from the trial court's order thereon.

[1] The first ground urged in support of the appeal is that the trial court was without jurisdiction to entertain the motion for a new trial for the reason that the moving party's codefendant was not served with the notice thereof. In making this point it is admitted by the appellant that it is only those parties to the action or proceeding whose interest would be adversely affected by the granting of the motion for a new trial who need be served with the notice thereof; but he argues that the interest of said Catherine Nicholson would be so adversely affected, for the reason that she, being an administratrix of the estate of the deceased, had the right, if she were satisfied with the correctness of the verdict, to insist that it be not disturbed, and that if the verdict were set aside and a new trial granted it might result in incurring further expenses against the estate. We think it obvious, however, that this possible expense to the estate is not sufficient upon which to predicate injury to Catherine Nicholson, as administratrix, should the motion be granted. The interest, to be injuriously affected, must be an interest which is concerned in the litigation. Her interest in this action was as administratrix of an estate against which a verdict had been rendered. If as the result of the motion the verdict should be set aside, the immediate result would be beneficial to her interest as administratrix rather than adverse, and this without regard to the fact that she might personally entertain the opinion that the verdict was just. She was not in this litigation actively supporting the plaintiff, or opposing her codefendant. She was simply quiescent, allowing her codefendant to bear the brunt of the plaintiff's attack. While in her answer she admitted the allegations of the complaint to be true, she did not join with the plaintiff in asking for the relief claimed. Under these circumstances her interest in the litigation would not have been injuriously affected by the granting of a new trial. Sprague v. Walton, 145 Cal. 228, 78 Pac. 645; Ex parte Young, 149 Cal. 173, 85 Pac. 145.

[2] The next ground urged in support of the appeal is that the order granting the motion for a new trial cannot be supported by the ground upon which it was made, namely, that the verdict is against law, and we think that this contention must be sustained. The notice of intention to move for a new trial specified 14 grounds upon which it would be made, the thirteenth being that the verdict is against law, and the fourteenth being "errors in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the defendants." On the hearing of the motion the court, probably being a little skeptical of the defendant's charge that at the trial it had fallen into error 14 times, according to the bill of exceptions, "asked counsel for the defendant to state the specific ground upon which the motion was based, whereupon, and in response to said request by the court, one of the counsel for the defendant stated that the motion was made upon the ground that the verdict is against law, and that he knew of no other ground on which to base it." And the order granting the motion contains the following:

"The court is satisfied that the verdict is justified by the evidence, and is not for excessive damages. Therefore the motion for a new trial is not granted upon the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, nor upon the ground of excessive damages, nor upon any other ground than the one upon which the motion was made and submitted, to wit, that the verdict is against law."

In suppprt of the order the respondent points out no particular in which the verdict is against law, but attempts to sustain the order by showing that the court erred in refusing to give certain instructions to the jury, and in giving an incorrect instruction to them. Such matters, however, do not have for their effect to make a verdict "against law" under the sixth subdivision of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but are "errors of law occurring at the trial" referred to in the seventh subdivision thereof. In the case of Brumagin v. Bradshaw, 39 Cal. 24, 35, this matter was considered, and it is there said:

"The statute, in authorizing a new trial on the ground that the verdict 'is against law,' evidently does not intend to include in that phrase all or any of the other several distinct and separate grounds of the motion, which are specified in the act. Whatever may be the class of cases to which that phrase was intended to apply, it is clear that it has no application to cases falling within either of the other subdivisions, into which the grounds for a new trial are divided by the statute."

Mr. Hayne, in his work on New Trial and Appeal, at section 99, at the conclusion of his discussion of this question, says:

"The result of the foregoing examination is that the phrase 'against law' applies only to cases where it can be seen that the verdict of the jury was against the instructions."

And the same author, at section 100 states:

"Errors in law include errors in giving or refusing instructions to the jury."

And again, at section 127:

"Errors in instructions are 'errors in law' occurring at the trial."

It is thus seen that the alleged errors of the trial court in refusing to give certain instructions to the jury, or in incorrectly instructing them, are not matters which render the verdict one "against law," which is the specific ground upon which the order granting the new trial was made.

[3] Cases are cited by the respondent to the effect that the appellate court is not bound by the particular ground upon which the order purports to be granted, but that it is our duty to uphold it if sustainable upon any ground upon which the motion was based. These cases have no application to the present situation, for the reason that, according to the record, the motion was made upon no other ground than the one upon which it was granted.

[4, 5] It is strenuously urged by the respondent that the motion was in fact made upon other grounds, including that of errors of law occurring at the trial; and in their brief they quote passages from a brief filed in the trial court upon the submission of the motion, which show that they did in fact argue other grounds for the granting of the motion. But this court is bound by the record upon appeal, and cannot permit it to be contradicted by matter contained in the brief filed. The respondent also points out that the statement in open court that the only ground upon which the motion was based was that the verdict is against law, was made by only one of the counsel in the case, and that the other several grounds enumerated in the notice of intention were not thereby waived. The record shows, however, that the statement was made by the particular counsel presenting the motion, and it contains nothing to indicate any dissent on the part of the other counsel. If they did not acquiesce in their associate's statement made in open court they should have taken means of bringing that dissent to the attention of the trial court. As the situation stands, the record shows that the motion was made upon one ground only, and granted upon that ground. The order, as we have seen, is not sustainable upon that ground.

In view of this conclusion it is not necessary to consider other points urged by the appellant in support of his appeal.

The order is reversed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; ST. SURE, Justice pro tem.

---

59 Cal. App. 788

LINDEMANN v. CORYELL. (Civ. 4214.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Nov. 28, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 25, 1923.)

1. Evidence ⟸444(6)—Assignee of note not estopped to object to parol evidence as to agreement of payee not to negotiate note.

Where a landowner gave a note payable in six months for dredging on his property, and relied on a promise of the payee not to negotiate the note, his borrowing money by giving mortgages on other property to pay interest on other notes secured by mortgages on the land was for his own benefit, and neither this nor the giving of the note for the dredging operated to estop an assignee of the note in a suit against the landowner from objecting to parol evidence that by agreement between the landowner and the payee the note was not to be paid or negotiated until the landowner could sell some of his land, since the note was for a debt the landowner was bound to pay, and the property surrendered in giving it was of no greater value than the chose in action for which it was surrendered.

2. Evidence ⟸441(11)—Parol evidence cannot be used to contradict note complete on its face by showing time of maturity contingent.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1625, 1698, relating to the effect and the modification of written contracts, a parol agreement made at the time of the execution of a note, which upon its face is complete, cannot be introduced to contradict its terms by showing an agreement not to assign it, and that it should not be payable until the maker sold certain land.

3. Evidence ⟸434(1)—Particular evidence is admissible to vary a writing where fraud is alleged.

Particular evidence is admissible to vary a writing where fraud is alleged, but not when the statements relate to rights depending upon contracts yet to be made, to which the person complaining is a party.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by I. Lindemann against J. B. Coryell. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

McWilliams & Hatfield and Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Thomas G. Crothers and George E. Crothers, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. [1] This action was brought to recover upon a certain promissory note executed by defendant in favor of the American Dredging Company for the sum of $18,235.21. The note was assigned to plaintiff after maturity. Judgment was recovered for the full amount prayed for, and this is an appeal from such judgment.

Defendant, by his pleading, admits the execution of the note; but as an affirmative defense he sets up certain facts which he claims estops the plaintiff from maintaining the action.

In substance, his answer alleges that prior to the execution of the note, and in the year 1915, defendant desired to have some dredging work done upon certain real property owned by him in San Francisco, and he thereupon entered into a contract with the American Dredging Company, the assignor of plaintiff herein, to do the work upon the verbal understanding and agreement that the dredging company was not to be paid therefor until such time as defendant might dispose of sufficient of the property to enable him to make payment.

That pursuant to this agreement the company did the work contracted for, and thereafter defendant made certain payments on account thereof, after which time the company requested defendant to execute and deliver to it his promissory note for the balance due.

That in conformity with this request defendant agreed to and did execute the note in question upon the condition and with the express understanding, so it is alleged, that the company would not sell or assign or hypothecate the same or enforce payment thereof until such time as defendant had sold sufficient of said real property to enable him to pay the note. It is then recited that, in reliance upon this agreement, defendant thereafter borrowed various sums of money for the purpose of protecting said real property by paying interest on mortgages which were liens thereon, and that he executed promissory notes for the sums so borrowed which were secured by a mortgage on other real property owned by him.

Further recitals are to the effect that defendant would not have incurred such indebtedness but for the reliance that he placed upon the alleged promise on the part of plaintiff's assignor, and that he had used his best efforts to dispose of sufficient of the dredged lands to enable him to pay off the note in question, but that owing to the condition of the real estate market he has been unable to do so.

Upon the trial, and in order to prove the facts as set forth in his answer, defendant was asked to state the circumstances surrounding the execution of the note. To this question plaintiff interposed an objection upon the ground that the defense attempted to be set up would contradict and impair the terms of a written instrument, and that the evidence sought to be elicited was therefore violative of the so-called parol evidence rule. The court below sustained the objection, and appellant assigns such ruling as error.

The instrument sued upon was a plain, unambiguous promissory note unconditioned in terms, and its execution and delivery, the consideration, and amount due are duly admitted, as is also the fact that the note was transferred after maturity, so that the rights of bona fide purchasers are not here involved. It further appears that the note was given some four years after the work was performed, and at a time when the statute of limitations was about to run against the claim, and it was made payable six months after date thereof. It may be further stated that plaintiff denies that either at the time of the execution of the note or at any other time was the alleged promise of forbearance or any promise ever made, and that the only assumption that they were so made is solely for the purpose of this appeal.

[2, 3] As above indicated, no questions of fraud, deceit, or mistake are raised; nor is the validity or explicitness of the note called into question or reformation asked for; the sale contention being that the note was transferred and sued upon contrary to the alleged agreement. The rule is elementary that a parol agreement made at the time of the execution of a written instrument, which upon its face is a complete expression of the agreement of the parties, cannot be introduced for the purpose of modifying or contradicting the terms of such instrument. The rule is one of wide application and requires no citation of authority for its support. Where parties have deliberately put their agreement in writing in such language as imports a legal obligation, it is conclusively presumed that the whole engagement and the extent and manner of their undertaking is there expressed. This rule has found expression in our Code (Civ. Code, §§ 1625, 1698) and, according to modern authority, has been held to be not one of evidence merely but also one of positive substantive law. Harding v. Robinson, 175 Cal. 534, 166 Pac. 808. The reason for the rule has been frequently announced. It is to the effect that it is founded on long experience and usage, and is so much more certain and accurate than that which rests in fleeting memory, and that it would be unsafe to admit weaker evidence to control or vary the stronger for the purpose of showing that the parties intended a different contract from that stated in their writing. It has been said that the rule is necessary because of the obvious fact that written instruments would soon be of little value if their explicit terms could be varied or controlled by parol evidence, and courts have expressed regret that in their anxiety to avoid possible injustice in particular cases that they have gradually modified a principle which has always been considered one of the greatest barriers against fraud and perjury. 20 Corpus Juris, § 1380. While generally there are exceptions to all rules, the nonobservance of this particular one in certain cases has caused legal chaos, for the different construction given to it at times has resulted in great confusion and conflict in the authorities, and it would be an idle task to review in detail the various departures. There is no question that particular evidence is admissible to vary a writing when fraud is alleged. In discussing this subject, however, Wigmore, in his work on Evidence, states that the term "fraud" must be understood in its legitimate narrow sense, and that failure knowingly to perform an extrinsic agreement not embodied in the writing cannot in strictness be legally included in the term "fraud." 4 Wigmore on Ev. § 2439. The rule that parol evidence is admissible where there is fraud on the part of the payee at the inception of the instrument is recognized, and the doctrine of estoppel has been applied with respect to representations of a party to prevent their operating as a fraud upon one who has been led to rely upon them. This doctrine, however, has been held to have no place for application when the statements relate to rights depending upon contracts yet to be made, to which the person complaining is a party as under such circumstances he has it in his power to guard in advance against any and all consequences of a subsequent change of conduct by the person with whom he is dealing, and to admit evidence of extrinsic agreements would be to open the door to all evils that the parol evidence rule was designed to prevent. Gandy v. Weckerly, 220 Pa. 285, 69 Atl. 858, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 434, 123 Am. St. Rep. 691, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 434. Closely allied to the question of fraud, the equitable doctrine of estoppel in pais has been extended in later years to a variety of cases, including the question of the right of one to invoke the power of equity against a party pleading the statute of limitations, or of setting up the statute of frauds in defense of an action. Counsel for appellant contends that these cases are analogous in principle, and he relies upon the reasoning thereof in support of his contention that plaintiff is estopped from invoking the parol evidence rule to prevent him from offering to prove the alleged agreements which he claims constitutes a defense.

Whether or not the reasoning in those cases is persuasive in support of the contention that, under the equitable doctrine of estoppel in pais, one may be estopped from invoking the parol evidence rule or under what circumstances the object of the parol evidence rule might be frustrated, are questions that we do not deem it necessary to consider or discuss, for it is conceded that an objection based upon the rule would be good were it not for the fact relied upon as constituting an estoppel, and we do not think that the facts alleged, evidence of which was rejected, contain the essential elements of an estoppel, or that they in any manner changed the position of defendant in the slightest degree or extent. His act in placing the incumbrance upon his property was not at the request of or for the benefit of plaintiff or his assignor, for, so far as the record shows, the company knew nothing about it. It was one for the benefit of defendant himself to protect his property. Nor can the giving of the note be said to have constituted an act upon which an estoppel can be predicated, for it secured to defendant six months further time on an obligation of four years' standing. The giving of the note was not obligatory upon him, but was an arrangement purely and exclusively for his benefit, for he was bound to pay the indebtedness for which the note was given.

To the suggestion that by this act defendant surrendered property, it may be said that the property surrendered was of no greater character than the chose in action for which it was given.

We are of the opinion, therefore, that the doctrine of estoppel in pais cannot here be invoked as a defense, as that doctrine has no application to the facts alleged, and the question becomes one purely academic, so far as the case is concerned. Defendant's obligation is entirely controlled by the terms of his written contract. Rottman v. Hevener (Cal. App.) 202 Pac. 329, 334.

This being so, it follows that the judgment must be and it is hereby affirmed.

We concur: KERRIGAN, J.; ST. SURE, Justice pro tem.

---

60 Cal. App. 103

REINDERS v. OLSEN. (Civ. 3702.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 8, 1922.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸705(10)—Motorcyclist seeing automobile approaching on opposite side of street held not negligent in crossing intersecting street into which it turned.

A motorcyclist struck by an automobile which lunged forward when he was nearly across an intersecting street into which it turned before reaching the center thereof, without slowing down, turning, or stopping to allow him to proceed, held not contributorily negligent because he saw it approaching 100 feet away on the opposite side of the street on which he was riding.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1011(1)—Trial court's decision on conflicting evidence not disturbed.

The trial court's decision on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles C. Crail, Judge.

Action by Anna Reinders against William Olsen. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Drake and B. P. Gibbs, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

D. A. Stuart, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. This is a personal action in which the plaintiff sued to recover $1,312.40 as damages for the injury sustained by her minor son, Robert Reinders. Upon a trial judgment was rendered for plaintiff for $826.15 and for her costs and disbursements therein.

[1] Defendant's contention that Reinders was guilty of negligence contributing to the accident which was the proximate cause of his injury cannot be sustained. The facts alleged by plaintiff are uncontradicted in regard to directions, speed and actual collision.

The following facts are undisputed: Robert Reinders, the minor son of plaintiff, was riding a motorcycle in an easterly direction along the south side of Third street; that at a point where Third street intersects Ban-dine street Olsen approached the intersection driving an automobile westerly on the north side of Third street, turning south, or to the left, on Bandine street before he reached the center of the intersection; that the point of collision occurred near the southeast corner of the intersection; that Reinders and Olsen were going about the same rate of speed, to wit, 10 or 12 miles an hour; that Reinders saw the automobile when he was 100 feet away from it and as it started to make the turn; that the automobile's left fender collided with the rear end of the motorcycle; Reinders continued straight ahead until the two vehicles were nearly together, when the defendant's automobile lunged forward and struck Reinders' motorcycle.

The only question of fact which is disputed is the truthfulness of Reinders' statement that the automobile lunged forward. Reinders himself testified as to what happened before the impact: "Like he had put in his clutch, his car gave a lunge and hit me." There is no evidence which contradicts this statement, yet defendant bases his entire claim to contributory negligence on the bald claim that automobiles do not lunge, and that Reinders saw Olsen 100 feet away. The last-named fact would not suggest to any one that Olsen would not slow down, or turn, or stop to allow the motorcycle to proceed in the course where it had a right to go.

[2] The evidence fully justified the conclusion that, except for the fact that defendant's car went forward suddenly just before it struck the motorcycle the motorcycle would have been unharmed. The court found that Reinders was not guilty of contributory negligence. The rule familiar to all lawyers that the decision of the trial court will not be disturbed where the evidence is conflicting is determinative of this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 29

PEOPLE v. AMORT. (Cr. 641.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 29, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 25, 1923.)

1. Intoxicating liquors ⟸236(11)—Evidence held to support conviction of illegal liquor selling.

In prosecution for selling liquor in no-license territory, evidence held to support conviction.

2. Intoxicating liquors ⟸236(11)—Evidence held not to support conviction of illegal liquor selling.

In prosecution for selling liquor in no-license territory, testimony, by one to whom the accused was charged to have sold, that he made arrangements to buy liquor from accused, but that he did not know whether liquors taken by the officers from his premises and used on the trial as evidence against accused were the liquors sold him by another or those sold him by accused, held insufficient to support conviction.

3. Witnesses ⟸380(5) — Prior inconsistent statements of one's own witness admissible only in case of surprise.

The right, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2049, 2052, to show prior inconsistent statements of one's own witness is dependent upon showing surprise by his testimony.

4. Criminal law ⟸369(6)—Testimony held not necessarily to relate to other offenses.

In liquor selling prosecution, testimony that after the transaction charged in the indictment accused, on being asked by the district attorney why he was bootlegging, replied that he had a mortgage on his place to pay off, but had not sold much as yet, was not objectionable as evidence of other offenses, as the implied admission in accused's answer did not necessarily involve an admission that he sold liquor to other persons than those named in the indictment.

5. Intoxicating liquors ⟸223(5)—Proof of selling on exact date charged not necessary.

In liquor selling prosecution, proof of the commission of the offense on the exact date charged in the indictment is not necessary, so long as the occasion on which the offense was committed may otherwise be identified and the occasion on which or the time at which the offense was committed be within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations.

6. Criminal law ⟸37—Conviction held not invalid as result of intrapment.

Where officers, learning that accused was selling intoxicating liquor in no-license territory, proceeded to his home, and one of them stated to accused that a friend of accused told him (the officer) that he could procure liquor from accused, and then accused sold him some liquor, conviction based on testimony of such facts was not opposed to public policy on the ground that the sale was procured by intrapment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; H. C. Bell, Judge.

Frank Amort was convicted of selling liquor in no-license territory, and from the judgment of conviction and an order denying him a new trial he appeals. Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

W. T. Belieu, of Willows, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was convicted in the superior court of Glenn county under an indictment charging him with selling intoxicating liquor in no-license territory, in said county of Glenn, contrary to the provisions of the so-called Wylie Local Option Law. Stats.

1911, p. 599. The indictment charges the defendant, in five different counts, with selling intoxicating liquor to three different persons.

In the first count it is charged that the defendant, on November 11, 1921, sold intoxicating liquor to one Frank Mursa. In the second, third, and fourth counts it is alleged that the defendant on the 1st, 10th and 14th days of November, respectively, sold intoxicating liquor to one Ladine and in the fifth count it is charged that he sold such liquor to one Frank Howard on the 15th day of November, 1921. In each of the counts it is alleged that the liquor so charged to have been sold by said defendant was "spirituous, intoxicating liquor containing more than 1 per cent. in volume of alcohol." He was convicted under the first, second, third, and fifth counts of the indictment. A motion for a new trial by him was denied, and thereupon he was fined the sum of $600, being $150 on each of the four counts, with the alternative of imprisonment for one day for every $3 of said fine. The defendant prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order denying him a new trial.

The objections to the result reached below are, generally stating them, that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict as to any of the counts upon which the defendant was convicted, and that the court committed prejudicial error in allowing, over the objections of defendant, certain alleged incompetent testimony. It is further objected that the district attorney, in his address to the jury in behalf of the people, used language not justified by the record, and which therefore involved highly prejudicial misconduct. These points will be considered in the order in which they are thus stated.

The alleged sales of intoxicating liquor by the defendant took place on the ranch of the defendant's father, near the town of Orland, in Glenn county. The first count of the indictment, in which it is charged that the defendant sold intoxicating liquor to the said Maggart or Mursa, will first be considered.

[1] It appears that three employees of the so-called State Law Enforcement League, Dale W. Maggart, also known as Frank Mursa, J. E. Jerome, and G. L. Budd, were operating in Glenn county, and that they received information on the 11th day of November, 1921, that the defendant was engaged in the illicit liquor traffic at the ranch above referred to; that on the night of said day, at about the hour of half past 9 o'clock, they went in an automobile to the defendant's home, and while Jerome and Budd remained in the automobile, Maggart went into the house of the defendant, through the rear entrance thereof, and said to him that one Clifton, who was formerly a barkeeper in the town of Orland, and who at the time of this alleged sale resided in said town and was a personal acquaintance of the defendant, had told him (Mursa, as we shall hereafter refer to Maggart) that he could procure intoxicating liquor from the defendant; and after some conversation the defendant sold to Mursa a bottle of liquor, for which the latter paid the defendant $3. Mursa then left the defendant's home, taking the bottle of liquor with him. Budd, Jerome, and Mursa each testified that he tasted the liquor and pronounced it intoxicating. Prof. Talbot, professor of science and mechanics in the Willows High School, testified that he had studied and made experiments in chemistry, and in pursuing the investigations incident to that line of learning had had occasion to make analyses of various kinds of liquor for the purpose of determining their alcoholic content, that in his capacity as a chemist he was called upon to make an analysis of the particular liquor in question, and that upon such analysis he found that the alcoholic content of said liquor was 31 per cent. by volume.

Section 21 of the Wylie Local Option Law provides that the term "alcoholic liquors" as used in said act—

"shall include spirituous, vinous and malt liquors, and any other liquor or mixture of liquors which contains one per cent., by volume, or more, of alcohol, and which is not so mixed with other drugs as to prevent its use as a beverage."

It is clear that as to the first count of the indictment the above testimony sufficiently supports the verdict. It is true that the defendant introduced testimony tending to show that he was not at home on the night of the 11th of November, 1921, when the enforcement officers claimed to have called there and Mursa claimed to have purchased the liquor in question from the defendant. But it was for the jury to determine the conflict thus created in the testimony, and the verdict implies that the testimony presented by the defendant in support of his alibi was rejected, and that presented by the people in support of the allegations of the first count of the indictment was accepted by the jury. The verdict is therefore conclusive upon this court.

The second and third counts of the indictment charge that the defendant, on the 1st day of November, 1921, and the 10th day of November, 1921, sold intoxicating liquors to one Roy R. Ladine. The latter, testifying on behalf of the people, stated that on two different occasions in the month of November, 1921, he purchased intoxicating liquor from the defendant, and paid him for the liquor obtained the sum of $1.50 on each occasion. Ladine testified that he drank the liquor so obtained, and that it was intoxicating. On cross-examination he was made to admit that he was in more or less of a state of inebriety when he purchased the liquors from the defendant, and from this circumstance the jury were entitled to draw the inference that he was fully capable of determining, upon sampling the liquors obtained from the defendant on the two occasions referred to in the second and third counts of the indictment, whether they were of an intoxicating character. At any rate, we conclude that the testimony by Ladine was sufficient to show that the liquors he procured from the defendant were intoxicating, and that, the jury having accepted said testimony as verity, the verdict, as to the second and third counts, is amply supported.

[2] As to the fifth count, an examination of the record has convinced us that the defendant's conviction thereunder cannot be sustained. As seen, it is charged in said count that the defendant, on the 15th day of November, 1921, sold intoxicating liquor to one Frank Howard. The testimony of said Howard constituted all the proof offered to support this count of the indictment. Howard testified that some time in November, 1921, he made an arrangement with the defendant, whereby the latter was to leave a jug of brandy for him (Howard) in the back yard of the premises occupied by the witness. He further testified that, near the same time, he purchased a large quantity of liquor from a man by the name of Cupps, and also had requested him to leave the liquor at some particular spot in the rear of his premises. He stated that the defendant left the liquor he had arranged to purchase from him at the place designated on the witness' premises, and that Cupps did likewise; that he transferred said liquor from the jugs in which they were delivered to him to bottles, and that he placed the bottles on a shelf in a room in the building occupied by him. He testified and repeatedly declared that he did not know whether the two bottles of liquor which had been taken by the officers from his premises, and which were used at the trial as evidence against the defendant, were the liquors sold to him by Cupps or those sold to him by the defendant. Thus stood the case so far as the evidence is concerned against the defendant on the fifth count, until Howard was thereafter recalled by the prosecution, and asked by the district attorney the following question:

"I show you two bottles here again; and ask you if that night, the 21st of November, at your house, Charley Harelson (city marshal of Orland), and Sheriff Newt Power being present, did you say to them, pointing to those two bottles, that that was the Amort liquor?"

The question was objected to by defendant's counsel on the ground that the evidence thus sought to be elicited was incompetent in that it was hearsay. After considerable argument the court asked the district attorney if the purpose of the question was to impeach Howard, to which the district attorney replied in the affirmative; and, after further argument between counsel, the court overruled the objection upon the theory that, although the witness was produced by the people, his impeachment was proper as being within the contemplation of sections 2049 and 2052 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Upon the record as it is presented here upon the question in hand, the ruling was clearly erroneous. Section 2049 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"The party producing a witness is not allowed to impeach his credit by evidence of bad character, but he may contradict him by other evidence, and may also show that he has made at other times statements inconsistent with his present testimony, as provided in section two thousand and fifty-two."

Section 2052 reads:

"A witness may also be impeached by evidence that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony; but before this can be done the statements must be related to him, with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present, and he must be asked whether he made such statements, and if so, allowed to explain them. If the statements be in writing, they must be shown to the witness before any question is put to him concerning them."

[3] It is well settled that before a party will be permitted to impeach a witness produced by him in support of his side of the controversy, it must be made to appear that the witness' testimony is unexpectedly different from that which the party producing him believed he would give, and that the same is prejudicial to the rights of such party. As was said in the recent case of People v. Spencer (Cal. App.) 208 Pac. 380, 392:

"The purpose of the above section [section 2049, Code Civ. Proc.] is to permit a party who has, in good faith, placed a witness upon the stand, with the distinct understanding that he will give testimony in support of his side of the issue, but, instead of so doing, and to the surprise of the party presenting him as such witness, has given damaging testimony against said party, to show that, prior to giving his testimony, he made a statement which, if testified to, would be favorable to the party so making him his witness. * * * Zipperlen v. Southern Pac. Co., 7 Cal. App. 206, 214, 217, 93 Pac. 1049. But, to entitle the party to contradict such a witness, it must appear that he was taken by surprise by the testimony of the witness and that said testimony, as stated, was prejudicial to his case. A party has no right to invoke the aid of that section merely for the purpose of getting into the record testimony which otherwise could not be brought thereinto because of its incompetency. 'The mere failure of a witness to give favorable testimony for the party producing him does not entitle such party to prove that he has made contrary statements elsewhere.' People v. Creeks, 141 Cal. 532, 75 Pac. 103; People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 345, 83 Pac. 43; Zipperlen v. Southern Pacific Co., supra."

There is no showing in this case that the district attorney was surprised by the testimony of Howard to the effect that he was not able to say whether the liquor offered and received in evidence in the case against the defendant was from the jug of liquor purchased from the defendant or the jug of liquor bought from said Cupps. Indeed, if there may be said to be any showing at all in the case upon this proposition, it was the result of a colloquy between the district attorney and the attorney for the defendant during the course of the argument between them upon the question of the admissibility of the impeaching testimony, the attorney for the defendant saying that the same testimony was received at the former trial of this case and was stricken out, to which the district attorney replied that "it was not stricken out," but this would seem to justify the inference that the district attorney was very well aware of the fact, when he called Howard to the stand as a witness for the people at the trial of which this appeal is the outgrowth, that he would not testify that the liquor used at the trial as evidence to support the fifth count of the indictment was the liquor purchased from the defendant. Obviously, the importance of testimony showing that the liquor in question was purchased from the defendant lay in the fact that there was proof of the alcoholic content or the intoxicating nature of said liquor. If said liquor was furnished to Howard by said Cupps, then, of course, no case would be made against the defendant upon that count; or, to state the case as it here appears, there being no competent testimony showing that the defendant sold the liquor in question to Howard, the verdict, in so far as the fifth count is concerned, is without support, notwithstanding the liquor was shown to be of an intoxicating character.

[4] The court, against objection by counsel for the defendant, permitted the sheriff of Glenn county and one Roy Markham to testify that the defendant, at his home, on the 21st day of November, 1921, and after the alleged commission of the offenses charged in the indictment, practically admitted to said parties and to the district attorney that he had been engaged in bootlegging, as the illicit traffic in alcoholic liquors is now colloquially called. The objection to this testimony was placed upon the ground that its effect was to introduce into the case, to the prejudice of the rights of the accused, evidence of "other offenses" than those for which the defendant was upon trial. The sheriff testified that upon the occasion mentioned the district attorney asked the defendant "why he was selling liquor, or why he did this, and he said that he had a mortgage on the place he had to pay off, but that he had not sold much as yet." Markham's testimony was in substantial corroboration of the testimony of the sheriff. He said:

"We were going out to the barn—Mr. Powers and Mr. McGowan and myself—and the question was asked by Mr. McGowan why he had been peddling this stuff, bootlegging, to which the defendant replied, 'Well, I have got a big mortgage on the place, and I am trying to get out of debt, although I haven't sold a great deal.'"

Undoubtedly, testimony of the commission by the defendant of other specific offenses—that is, testimony that he had sold on other occasions to other people than the defendant intoxicating liquor—would be wholly incompetent. People v. Clark, 28 Cal. App. 670, 153 Pac. 719. We are not prepared to say, though, that evidence that a person on trial for selling liquor to a particular individual, tending to show that such defendant had been habitually engaged in the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors, would not be competent and proper as a circumstance tending to establish the particular charge in the indictment or information. It certainly would tend to prove that the defendant was under no misapprehension as to the character of the article he sold to the party named in the accusatory pleading as the one to whom he had sold intoxicating liquor. But we are not required to decide this proposition herein. The declaration of the defendant to which the sheriff and Markham testified in this case did not necessarily involve an admission that he had sold liquor to any particular persons other than those named in the indictment. In other words, what he said in reply to the question propounded to him by the district attorney may be assumed to have referred, at least in part, to the transactions upon which the indictment was founded, and, therefore, even if it might be construed to extend to other transactions, it was, nevertheless, admissible in its bearing upon the several charges set forth in the accusatory pleading in this case. It would seem to be clear that, when the district attorney asked the questions, he could have had in mind no other transactions involving the sale of liquor by the defendant than those mentioned in the indictment, since it does not appear that he knew of any other such transaction having been carried out by the defendant.

[5] It is contended that the evidence fails to show that the defendant sold liquor to Ladine on the days designated in the indictment, and that, therefore, the charges contained in the two counts as to the sales to Ladine are not evidentially supported. It is true that while the precise time at which each of the sales charged in the indictment as having been made by the defendant to Ladine is not shown by the evidence, it is so shown that those sales took place on two different occasions in the month of November, 1921. Under the general rule, proof of the commission of the offense on the exact date charged in the indictment is not necessary so long as the occasion on which the offense was committed may otherwise be identified, and that the occasion on which or the time at which the offense was committed be within the period prescribed by the statute of limitations. State v. Rogers, 31 Mont. 4, 77 Pac. 294; People v. Lafuente, 6 Cal. 202. No other sales were shown to have been made to Ladine during said month but those mentioned in the first and second counts, and this is sufficient to identify the particular crimes alleged in counts 2 and 3 of the indictment.

It is contended that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct during the course of his argument to the jury. Consideration of what was said by that official in his argument with respect to count 5 charging the defendant with selling liquor to Howard, and which is assigned as misconduct on the part of the district attorney, may be waived, since the judgment and the order as to said count must be reversed. We have examined the other assignments under this head, and have thus become convinced that there is no merit in the claim upon which they are founded. Some of the alleged objectionable remarks by the district attorney were not excepted to at the time they were uttered, while others we hold to have been within the bounds of legitimate argument upon the issues as presented by the indictment and developed by the evidence.

[6] Lastly, we may briefly notice the suggestion by the appellant that his conviction is opposed to public policy for the asserted reason that the sales of intoxicating liquor by him, as alleged in the indictment, were the result of his intrapment into the commission of the alleged criminal acts by the officers, with no design on his part originally to commit said acts. In other words, the suggestion is that the officers themselves originated the design to have the crimes charged in the indictment committed and by some artful means induced the defendant, who until then had no intention of doing the wrongful acts, to carry out said design. There is no ground afforded by the record for the support of this suggestion. As shown, the officers had obtained information that the defendant was engaged in selling intoxicating liquor and upon acquiring such information proceeded to his home to investigate the matter, with the result as above explained. The officers in so proceeding did nothing more than their official duties required them to do. What is said regarding precisely the same proposition in People v. Tomasovich (Cal. App.) 206 Pac. 119, is pertinent to the suggestion here made, and is, indeed, a full answer thereto.

As to counts Nos. 1, 2, and 3, the judgment and the order are affirmed, and as to count No. 5 the judgment and the order are reversed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 39

Ex parte MILLER. (Cr. 943.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Nov. 29, 1922.)

1. Arrest ⟸29—Conclusions of law, stated in affidavit for arrest, not considered as support for order.

Conclusions of law, stated in the affidavit for arrest, may not be considered as a support for the order.

2. Arrest ⟸29—Hearsay in affidavit for arrest not looked to in determining whether sufficient ground shown for order.

Matters of hearsay in an affidavit for arrest may not be looked to in determining whether sufficient ground has been shown for an order of arrest.

3. Arrest ⟸29—Affidavit for arrest on ground that defendant was guilty of fraud in contracting debt insufficient.

Where affidavit for arrest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 481, showed that defendant contracted with plaintiffs for the purchase of hay at a named price per ton, payment to be made 30 days after delivery to defendant of receipt for total weights delivered to him; that 440 tons were delivered between June 26 and August 29; that about September 30 plaintiff asked defendant what he had done with the money he had received from the sale of the hay, and defendant said he had "spent it for expenses," the remainder of the affidavit being to the effect that defendant had hurriedly sold the hay purchased at a sacrifice in order to convert it into cash, and showing insolvency—it was insufficient to warrant an arrest under Code Civ. Proc. § 479, subd. 4, authorizing arrest where defendant has been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt, or incurring the obligation for which action was brought.

4. Arrest ⟸29—Averment of insolvency in affidavit for arrest available on showing existence at the time debt was contracted.

An averment of insolvency in an affidavit for arrest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 479, when defendant has been guilty of fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation for which action is brought, is a factor only where it is shown that defendant sought to be arrested concealed or omitted to disclose his insolvency at the time the obligation was incurred, and available only when accompanied with a showing that defendant cannot reasonably expect to pay the debt incurred, or that there was a fraudulent intent on his part not to pay.

Original application by J. Miller for a writ of habeas corpus against the sheriff of Los Angeles County. Petitioner discharged.

---

Jesse R. Shafer, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Newby & Palmer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Petitioner is in the custody of the sheriff of Los Angeles county pursuant to proceedings taken under sections 479 and 481 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The former section provides for the cases in which defendants in civil actions may be arrested. Section 481 is to the effect that an order for such an arrest may be made "whenever it appears to the judge, by the affidavit of the plaintiff, or some other person, that a sufficient cause of action exists, and that the case is one of those mentioned in section four hundred and seventy-nine. The affidavit must be either positive or upon information and belief; and when upon information and belief, it must state the facts upon which the information and belief are founded."

The "Affidavit for Order of Arrest," so entitled, pursuant to which petitioner was arrested, sets forth facts tending to show that the "case" was "one of those mentioned in section" 479. It is also stated in the affidavit "that a cause of action exists in favor of the plaintiffs against the said defendant," petitioner here, "* * * as fully appears from the verified amended complaint herein, a copy of which is hereunto annexed and made a part of this affidavit." There were two plaintiffs in the action in which petitioner was defendant, and one of them made oath to the affidavit. The amended complaint referred to in the affidavit was verified by the other plaintiff, the verification being in the form required by section 446, Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore containing the statement "that the same is true of his own knowledge, except as to the matters which are [t]herein stated upon his information and belief, and as to those matters that he believes it to be true."

Petitioner contends that the affidavit for order of arrest, so entitled, contains no statement that the allegations of the amended complaint are true, and that therefore there is no showing by affidavit, as required by section 481, that "a sufficient cause of action exists" against the defendant, there being in the affidavit no statement of the facts constituting the alleged cause of action. We find it unnecessary to decide whether the amended complaint, verified by one of the plaintiffs as it was, may be considered as an affidavit under section 481, although the point naturally arises. We do not decide that question, but concede to respondent for the sake of argument that the amended complaint may be so considered, for the reason that the showing made by the "affidavit," so called, and by the amended complaint as an affidavit, when taken together, was in our opinion insufficient to support the order of arrest. The question whether a complaint may be considered as an affidavit for an order of arrest was before the Supreme Court in Ex parte Fkumoto, 120 Cal. 316, 52 Pac. 726, but was not decided. The point was decided, in effect, in Peterson v. Nesbitt, 11 Cal. App. 370, 105 Pac. 135, but we express neither an assent to nor a dissent from the doctrine of the opinion in that case.

[1, 2] Petitioner contends that there was no sufficient showing of fact to justify the making of the order of arrest under which the sheriff detains him. It is insisted, first, that conclusions of law stated in the affidavits may not be considered as a support for the order. This contention is upheld in Ex parte Gillett, 47 Cal. App. 107, 190 Pac. 209. It is also said that matters of hearsay in an affidavit may not be looked to in determining whether sufficient ground has been shown for an order of arrest. This contention is also supported by well-reasoned authority. It was determined in Neves v. Costa, 5 Cal. App. 111, 89 Pac. 860, that where a plaintiff states facts in his affidavit in support of statements made therein upon his information and belief, the supporting matters so stated must be facts within his own knowledge. It is there said:

"In order that a party who has not sufficient knowledge of his own to make the required showing may avail himself of this provisional remedy in a proper case, the Code permits him to supplement his own affidavit with that of some one else who knows some fact or facts."

[3] We therefore proceed to state the facts shown by the two affidavits, treating the amended complaint as one, omitting from our recital all conclusions of law and statements of hearsay, and bearing in mind that petitioner's arrest was sought under the terms of subdivision 4 of section 479, to the effect that a defendant may be arrested when he "has been guilty of a fraud in contracting the debt or incurring the obligation for which the action is brought." It is shown by the affidavits that petitioner entered into a written agreement with plaintiffs in the action, the contract being for the purchase by him from them of 500 tons of hay, "approximately, more or less," at $15 the ton, payment to be made 30 days after delivery to petitioner of receipt for total weights of hay delivered to him. It is further shown that 440 tons of hay were delivered to petitioner between June 26 and August 29, 1922; that petitioner stated to one of the plaintiffs that the weights of hay were delivered to him prior to August 29th, the complaint having been filed on or after October 11th and the order for petitioner's arrest having been made on November 6th; and that on or about September 30th one of the plaintiffs asked petitioner "what he had done with the money he had received from the sale of the hay purchased by him from the plaintiffs in this action and from other persons, and the defendant gave no satisfactory response, saying only that he had 'spent it for expenses.'" In explanation of this quoted matter it should be said that it follows hearsay statements in the "affidavit" to the effect that petitioner had hurriedly sold the hay he had purchased from the plaintiffs and from others at a sacrifice in order to convert it into cash.

[4] It is further shown by the affidavits that petitioner was insolvent at all the times mentioned therein. A mere perusal of this recital serves to convince that there was no showing sufficient to support the order of arrest. The only matter tending even slightly in that direction was the allegation of insolvency, but even that averment is insufficient, for the reason that there was no showing that the plaintiffs did not know of petitioner's insolvency at the time the contract between them was made. An averment of insolvency in such cases is a factor only where it is shown that the defendant sought to be arrested conceals or omits to disclose his insolvency at the time the obligation is incurred, and it is available even then only when accompanied with a showing that the person cannot reasonably expect to pay the indebtedness incurred, or that there is a fraudulent intent on his part not to pay. 5 C. J. 458, 459. The affidavits here are barren of any allegations in these respects.

Petitioner is discharged from custody.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

(60 Cal. App. 14)

FREEMAN v. CREELMAN. (Civ. 2520.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 28, 1922.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⇐21 — Land sale contract not indefinite as to payment.

In view of Civ. Code, § 3538, providing "that is certain which can be made certain," where land sale contract contained two alternative propositions as to the first cash payment, that, if 40 acres of bare land were set out to trees by purchaser in the spring of 1921, it would pay a named price, but if the trees were not put out at that time it was to pay a greater amount, payment depended on a contingency readily determinable by the fact itself.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⇐21—Term of land sale contract as to whether owner had contracted for fruit trees capable of determination.

A land sale contract which provided that, if vendor had contracted for fruit trees, purchaser should have advantage of that contract at the sale price agreed on by vendor, was capable of determination by an ascertainable fact.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⇐21 — Land sale contract held not indefinite as to obligation of purchaser to pay taxes.

A land sale contract was not indefinite in that it did not appear by purchaser's offer by whom taxes were to be paid during the time that a deed remained in escrow, when the offer stipulated that the deed should so remain until a definite cash payment was made, when it was to be delivered to purchaser, who was to give vendor mortgage for the unpaid balance, at which time purchaser would have imposed on him the duty of paying taxes assessed.

4. Appeal and error ⇐1011(1) — Finding of trial court on conflicting evidence conclusive on appeal.

In action for broker's commissions, where there was a conflict in the evidence between vendor and purchaser as to carrying out the terms of the contract procured by broker, the finding of the trial court is conclusive on appeal.

5. Brokers ⇐86(3)—Evidence held to show failure of vendor and purchaser procured by broker to consummate deal was not due to fault of broker.

In action for commissions, evidence held to show that failure of defendant and purchaser procured by plaintiff for defendant's land to consummate the deal was not due to fault of plaintiff.

6. Brokers ⇐63(1) — Commissions earned when customer produced ready, able, and willing to purchase on terms prescribed.

If within the time limited a broker produces a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to purchase on the terms prescribed, the owner cannot evade payment of commissions by refusing or neglecting to consummate the sale, or by selling the property to another, or by so negligently dealing with the purchaser as to lose the benefit of the sale.

7. Brokers ⇐63(3)—Owner cannot change terms after broker produced customer on terms prescribed.

If a broker is the procuring cause of bringing to the owner of property a person who is ready, willing, and able to purchase on the terms prescribed, and the owner thereafter changes the terms or conditions on which he authorized the broker to make the sale, the broker is entitled to compensation which the owner agreed to pay.

8. Brokers ⇐54 — Owner accepting customer produced by broker, estopped to deny latter's ability or willingness to complete contract.

Once the customer produced by the broker is accepted, the employer is thereafter estopped from denying the purchaser's ability or willingness to complete the contract, and his acceptance estops him from alleging anything against the broker's claim for commissions except fraud on the part of the broker inducing acceptance.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by L. L. Freeman against Irvine M. Creelman. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

---

W. H. Carlin, of Marysville, for appellant.
Richard Belcher, of Marysville, and Lawrence Schillig, of Yuba City, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiff, a licensed real estate broker, and the defendant, on the 12th day of October, 1920, entered into a written agreement whereby the first named was employed and authorized by the latter to sell for him (defendant) 110 acres of land, situated in the county of Sutter, for the sum of $450 per acre, the plaintiff to have the exclusive right to negotiate such sale for the term of 60 days from the date of the execution of the agreement, and was to receive as compensation for his services so performed a commission of 5 per cent. of the aggregate indicated purchase price of said land. On November 10, 1920, the plaintiff having previously conducted negotiations leading thereto, the following offer or proposal to purchase said land was addressed to the plaintiff by Ritz-Fasig Company, a copartnership:

"Marysville, Calif., Nov. 10, 1920.

"Mr. L. L. Freeman, Marysville, Calif.—Dear Mr. Freeman: In reference to the Creelman place situated 5½ miles northwest of Yuba City, Calif., and consisting of about 110 acres, we wish to make the following offer:

"First—We offer the sum of $450 dollars per acre which is to be paid in the following manner: If the forty acres of bare land is set out to trees by us in the spring of 1921, we will pay ten thousand ($10,000) cash, but if the trees are not put out the spring of 1921 by us we are to pay twelve thousand ($12,000) dollars. It is understood, however, that if Mr. Creelman has placed an order for the peach trees he is to turn his contract over with the land with the understanding that we are to receive the trees for the same price named in the contract.

"Second—At the time either of the above amounts are paid a contract is to be furnished; also a deed is to be placed in escrow at the Rideout Bank with the instructions that said deed is to be turned over to us after the cash payment of twenty thousand ($20,000) dollars has been made, we to furnish a first mortgage covering the remainder of the purchase price. It is understood that the proceeds of one-half of the gross of the 1921 crop is to be applied as a cash payment on the purchase price. If this amount is more than the amount required to make up the twenty thousand dollar cash payment it is also to be applied to the purchase price, the rate of interest on all deferred payments is to be six per cent. An abstract is to be furnished with the contract, and we are to have said abstract for a long enough time (not to exceed thirty days) in which to examine said abstract and title.

"In making this offer we agree to take charge of the property and to till same in the same manner as other property in the same locality is handled.

"It is understood that we are to place upon the property such buildings or improvements as is necessary in our judgment.

"Third—It is understood that the remainder of the purchase price is to be paid on or before five years after the date of the contract, but we reserve the right to make any cash payment we wish to make on any interest paying date or six months thereafter.

"This offer is to be accepted or rejected by Mr. Creelman within a period of ten days from date hereof.

"Yours very truly, Ritz-Fasig Co.,
"By Lester H. Fasig."

On the day that the foregoing offer was delivered to plaintiff the sum of $500 was paid to him by the Ritz-Fasig Company as an earnest for the fulfillment of the obligations or terms contained in said letter, and the following instrument thereupon executed by the said plaintiff, and which, as will be observed, was approved by the defendant:

"Marysville, Calif., Nov. 10, 1921.

"Received from Ritz-Fasig Company the sum of five hundred ($500) dollars as part payment on the purchase price of forty-nine thousand five hundred ($49,500) dollars for the holding of Irvine M. Creelman consisting of about 110 acres and located 5½ miles northwest of Yuba City, Sutter county, California.

"It is agreed and understood that this receipt is to be attached to the offer submitted to me by Ritz-Fasig Company on this date, and is to cover all the conditions named in said offer.

"It is agreed and understood that if the offer is not accepted by Irvine M. Creelman the sum of five hundred dollars is to be returned to Ritz-Fasig Company.

"It is agreed and understood that if the offer is accepted and a safe, merchantable title cannot be furnished them the deposit is also to be returned.

"This receipt is given subject to the approval of the owner, Irvine M. Creelman.

"L. L. Freeman.

"Approved—Irvine M. Creelman."

The plaintiff, claiming that he had produced within the time to which his authority to sell the land was limited a purchaser willing, ready, and able to purchase the land upon the terms and conditions prescribed by the owner of said land, and further claiming that he was entitled to the stipulated commissions for the service so performed, and the defendant, having refused to pay the plaintiff said commissions, brought this action to recover the sum of $2,475, alleged to be due him under his contract with the defendant to negotiate the sale of the said property.

The complaint sufficiently states a cause of action for the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. The answer specifically denies the material averments of the complaint, and alleges that the defendant was at all times after signing the above documents ready, willing, and able to comply with the terms thereof, and to "perform all acts and conditions on his part to be performed as therein set forth," but that neither plaintiff nor Ritz-Fasig Company "was either ready, willing, or able to perform the covenants and conditions on their part to be performed as therein set forth, and because thereof, and for that reason only the lands, and premises therein referred to were not purchased from this defendant."

The parties waived a trial by jury, and the cause was tried by the court, whose findings of fact and conclusions of law were favorable to the plaintiff, to whom, accordingly, judgment was awarded for the sum prayed for in the complaint. A motion for a new trial by the defendant was denied, and the appeal from the judgment, supported by a record prepared according to the alternative method, is prosecuted by the defendant.

The defendant contends that the writings above presented herein are so indefinite and uncertain as to the terms thereof that they are, as constituting the contract between the owner of the land and the proposed purchaser, incapable of specific enforcement; that therefore the agreement is not binding upon the parties, and consequently the plaintiff failed to produce a purchaser "ready, willing, and able" to purchase the land. We perceive no ground upon which the contention can be maintained that the contract, as to the terms and conditions thereof, is ambiguous or uncertain or indefinite in any respect. The purchase price of the land, the times at which the payments thereof are to be made, the interest on deferred payments, the condition upon which a deed in escrow to be placed in the hands of a bank by the owner was to be delivered to the proposed vendee, and the disposition of the proceeds of a named proportion of the crops of the year 1921 are all set forth in language so clear that the meaning thereof cannot possibly be misunderstood or misapprehended; and that the defendant must have thoroughly understood the terms of the offer which constitutes a part of the agreement is evidenced by the fact that he approved the same upon the presentation to him by the plaintiff of the document acknowledging the receipt of the $500 cash payment upon the making of the offer, which document, it will be noted, expressly makes itself a part of the offer to purchase the premises by Ritz-Fasig Company.

[1] A point is sought to be made out of the fact that the agreement contains two alternative propositions as to the first cash payment, to wit, that, if the 40 acres of bare land are set out to trees by Ritz-Fasig Company in the spring of 1921, it will pay $10,000 cash, but if the trees are not put out in the spring of 1921 by said offerer it is to pay $12,000 cash, and that, if the owner has placed an order for the peach trees, he is to turn his contract over with the land with the understanding that the vendee is to receive the trees for the price named in the contract. There is nothing indefinite or uncertain about these provisions. Whether the sum of $10,000 or that of $12,000 should be paid upon the execution of the agreement of sale depended upon a contingency which is readily determinable by the fact itself—that is, whether the 40 acres of bare land are or are not set out in trees by the proposed vendee in the spring of 1921.

[2] Likewise the proposition whether the owner had placed an order for peach trees to be planted in said 40 acres is readily capable of determination by a readily ascertainable fact—that is, whether the owner has made any such contract. If he has he must turn it over to the vendee in precisely the same terms and conditions as he (the owner) made it. Of course, it will not be doubted that these matters may be shown—indeed, the offer in these respects in its very nature contemplates that they shall so be shown—by evidence aliunde, and thus, even though it might be said that the offer upon its face was uncertain in those particulars, the uncertainty would be removed when a particular one of the two alternatives is adopted. Such an agreement, in fact, comes within the letter as well as the spirit of the maxim declared in section 3538 of the Civil Code, "That is certain which can be made certain." There are other particulars in which it is claimed that the offer is indefinite and uncertain, and which renders the agreement to sell and purchase unenforceable.

[3] Only one or two of these objections need be taken notice of herein, since the writings constituting the offer and acceptance are herein reproduced in hæc verba, and themselves we think, plainly negative any contention that said writings have no binding force upon the parties thereto. One of the objections here referred to is that it is not made to appear by the offer by whom taxes upon the land are to be paid during the time that the deed remains in escrow. There is no merit to this proposition. The offer plainly stipulates that the deed shall remain in escrow until the cash payment of $20,000 on the purchase price shall have been made, when it was to be delivered to the purchaser, the latter to give the seller a mortgage on the premises to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase price, and thereupon to take "charge," or, what amounts to the same thing, possession, of the property. In other words, the proposition is that a sale of the premises to the Ritz-Fasig Company should be effected by the payment of the $20,000 and the giving of the mortgage by said firm to the seller to secure the balance of the purchase price. Upon the performance of these acts, the title would, of course, immediately vest in the purchaser, and, necessarily, the latter would thus have imposed upon it the duty of paying all taxes assessed against the premises, failure to do which would entail upon it the usual consequences of such a default.

Another objection is that the agreement upon its face is unreasonable. We do not think so. To the contrary, it thus appears to be fair and just as to both parties. Nor, as we shall later perceive, does the evidence show that the agreement is unreasonable or unfair. Counsel for the defendant cites a large number of cases which he claims sustain the view that the contract here is too uncertain and indefinite to render it capable of specific enforcement. Many of these cases involve actions for the specific performance of contracts. In none of them, however, do we find the facts to be analogous to the facts of this case. In other words, the contracts dealt with in the cases relied upon by defendant are entirely different from the contract with which we are here dealing.

It follows from the foregoing views that, if the evidence does not show that the failure to consummate the sale according to the terms of the agreement above considered was due to the fault of the plaintiff, then the latter, having caused the minds of the defendant and the Ritz-Fasig Company to meet and agree upon the terms and the conditions set forth in said agreement of sale, has earned the compensation which the defendant agreed to pay him for negotiating such sale. This brings us to a consideration of the evidence.

It appears that the firm of Ritz-Fasig Company was composed of H. S. Fasig, his son, Lester H. Fasig, and his son-in-law, George Ritz. It will be observed that the offer was executed and delivered to the plaintiff for and in the name of the firm by Lester H. Fasig. H. S. Fasig testified that the offer was thus executed and delivered to the plaintiff with the consent of all the members of the firm. After the offer was delivered to the plaintiff and accepted by the defendant, the Fasigs visited Yuba City on three different occasions for the purpose of consummating the deal. To this end an abstract of the property was demanded by said parties, and by the defendant delivered to them or their attorney, A. C. McLaughlin, Esq., of Yuba City. An examination of the abstract disclosed that there was a mortgage upon the land of the defendant in Sutter county, embracing also the premises in question. Of the existence of this mortgage lien upon the premises in question Fasig stated that neither he nor his partners had any knowledge until the fact was revealed to him through the examination of the abstract. H. S. Fasig and the defendant had several meetings, and said Fasig declared to him on all occasions that he was willing, able, and ready to purchase the premises according to the terms of his offer, provided the defendant would relieve the premises of the lien of the mortgage. Fasig, on the occasion of his first meeting with the defendant, stated that he had no objection to a mortgage being on the premises, but that he did not desire that the land which he proposed to purchase should be subject to a mortgage lien which covered other lands of the defendant. He insisted that the lien of the mortgage should be removed from the property before he would carry out the transaction. Fasig testified that the defendant "was not willing to give us a deed of clear title." Transcript, p. 29. Another point of difference arose between them on the same occasion in this: That the defendant insisted that after the sale, and the Ritz-Fasig Company took possession of the property, he (defendant) should have control of the crops then growing upon the premises so he could be certain that he would receive the one-half gross profits thereof as prescribed in the offer. To this the Fasigs objected, claiming that such an arrangement would not be in accord with the terms of his offer. The parties separated without carrying out the option agreement. But subsequently the Fasigs returned to Yuba City, and held further negotiations with the defendant, and again offered to purchase the premises upon the terms and conditions prescribed in the offer. The defendant still insisted upon having control of the fruit crops, and, after another meeting, with the same result, the transaction was called off.

The facts above stated were testified to not only by H. S. Fasig, but also by his son and other witnesses who were present at one of the meetings held in the plaintiff's office in the city of Marysville.

[4, 5] It is true that the defendant contradicted the testimony so given. In fact, he testified that at the meeting at plaintiff's office in Marysville he explicitly offered to sell the property to the Ritz-Fasig Company upon the terms and conditions of its offer, but that it flatly refused to make the purchase. This testimony by the defendant was positively contradicted in rebuttal by several witnesses who were present in said office on the occasion of the meeting referred to. Thus a conflict in the evidence arose, and it was for the court to determine that conflict. The implied finding upon that proposition is conclusive upon this court. But, however this all may be, it is clear from the testimony presented by the plaintiff and the findings of the court that their failure to consummate the deal was not due to any fault of the plaintiff.

[6] The law relating to contracts by which real estate brokers are authorized to sell property for others on commission is well settled. Mechem on Agency, § 967, states the general rule as follows:

"If, within the time limited, the broker has produced a purchaser who is ready, willing, and able to purchase upon the terms prescribed, the principal cannot evade the payment of the broker's commission by then refusing or neglecting to consummate the sale, * * * or by selling the property to another, or by so negligently dealing with the proposed purchaser as to lose the benefit of the sale."

And:

"In consonance with the rule as thus stated, it has been held that if the broker has fulfilled upon his part, 'he will be entitled to his commissions, although the sale is not consummated because the principal's title proves defective (Hamlin v. Schulte, 34 Minn. 534, 27 N. W. 301; Goodridge v. Holladay, 18 Ill. App. 363; Gonzales v. Broad, 57 Cal. 224; Knapp v. Wallace, 41 N. Y. 477; Doty v. Miller, 43 Barb. [N. Y.] 529; Sibbald v. Bethelhem Iron Works, 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441), or because the principal's wife refuses to join in the conveyance (Clapp v. Hughes, 1 Phila. [Pa.] 382), or because the purchaser refuses to complete the sale on account of false representations made by the principal.'"

See Glentworth v. Luther, 21 Barb. (N. Y.) 145; Justy v. Erro, 16 Cal. App. 519, 522, 117 Pac. 575.

[7] To the foregoing it may be added that, if the broker is the procuring cause of bringing to the owner of the property, a person who is ready, willing, and able to purchase such property upon the terms prescribed by the owner, and the latter thereafter changes the terms or conditions upon which he authorized the broker to make the sale, thereby frustrating the sale to the purchaser so procured, the broker is, nevertheless, entitled to the compensation which the principal agreed to pay him for negotiating the sale. In other words, if the broker negotiates the sale with a party, and the latter has consented to buy, and is ready, willing, and able to do so, upon the terms upon which the broker was authorized to negotiate the sale of the property, the right of the latter to the agreed compensation for negotiating such sale cannot be defeated by the act of the owner of the property in so changing the terms and conditions upon which the sale was to be made as to cause a failure of the consummation thereof.

[8] But the defendant having accepted a purchaser procured by the plaintiff, and no fraud on the part of the plaintiff in inducing the acceptance of the proposition to sell being shown, the ground upon which or the reason for which the sale was not consummated—whether through the fault of the defendant or the proposed purchaser—is immaterial, for the case clearly falls within the rule stated as follows in 4 Ruling Case Law, 49:

"Once the customer procured by the broker is accepted by the employer, the latter is thereafter estopped from denying the purchaser's ability or willingness to complete the contract, inasmuch as he is not bound to accept the offer of such person without a reasonable opportunity to inquire and satisfy himself in relation to it. Consequently his acceptance should estop him from alleging anything against the claim except fraud on the part of the broker in inducing the acceptance."

The said rule has been approved by a number of California cases, among which are Carrington v. Smithers, 26 Cal. App. 460, 461, 147 Pac. 225, and Wood & Tatum Co. v. Basler, 37 Cal. App. 381, 384, 173 Pac. 1109, an application for a hearing in the Supreme Court in the latter case having been denied.

It should be suggested that, in view of the last-mentioned rule, within the doctrine of which we think the case here falls, the attorney for the plaintiff objected in the court below to the evidence regarding the circumstances under which the failure to complete the sale was brought about. Without deciding whether the evidence was wholly immaterial for any purpose, we may say that we regarded it as proper to consider herein the evidence, and also the contention of the defendant as to the asserted ambiguity of the agreement between the defendant and Ritz-Fasig Company for the sale of the property, thus showing that in any view of the case the judgment cannot be disturbed.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 8

MARTIN et ux. v. SUTTER. (Civ. 2512.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Nov. 28, 1922.)

1. Trial ⊂⊃350(3)—Special questions as to damages not asked may be submitted to jury.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 625, special issues calling for answers affecting punitive damages may be submitted to the jury, though such damages were not asked or awarded by the jury.

2. Libel and slander ⊂⊃6(1), 7(16)—"Bitch" or "son of a bitch" not actionable per se.

The word "bitch" or "son of a bitch" is not actionable per se, and when the former word is applied to a female it does not impute unchastity.

3. Libel and slander ⊂⊃22—Words must be understood by those hearing them uttered in a slanderous sense.

Words spoken must be understood by those who heard them uttered in a slanderous sense.

4. Libel and slander ⊂⊃100(7)—Rule of allegation and proof where libel in language of covert meaning stated.

When a slander or libel is couched in language having a covert meaning not apparent on its face or in words or phrases not used otherwise than as slang or cant, plaintiff must not only allege and prove the slanderous or libelous sense in which they were used by defendant but also that they were understood in the same sense by those to whom they were addressed.

5. Libel and slander ⊂=2, 22—Elements to be established where words not slanderous on their face or per se stated.

To establish a case for libel or slander, where the words are not on their face or per se slanderous or libelous, it is essential to show that the publisher of the words intended they should be understood as imputing wrongdoing or wrong conduct to plaintiff, and that they were so understood by those who heard or read them.

6. Libel and slander ⊂=125—Special finding that defendant did not use words with evil purpose of slandering plaintiff controls general verdict for plaintiff.

In action for slander for calling plaintiff a bitch, where the jury made special findings that witness who heard the words uttered by defendant understood him to mean by their use that plaintiff was an unchaste woman and also found that defendant did not use the words with evil purpose of slandering plaintiff, the special findings, though inconsistent with each other, were inconsistent with a general verdict for plaintiff, and under Code Civ. Proc. § 625, control the general verdict, and a directed judgment for defendant was proper.

Appeal from Superior Court, Placer County; J. E. Prewett, Judge.

Action by W. H. Martin and wife against Joseph Sutter. Verdict for plaintiffs, and, from a judgment n. o. v. for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Slade and Marshall Z. Lowell, both of Auburn, for appellants.

Meredith, Landis & Chester, of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. The plaintiffs are husband and wife. The action is for damages claimed to have been suffered by the plaintiffs for slanderous language alleged to have been used by the defendant of, to, and concerning the plaintiff Mrs. Floretta Martin. The action is based on subdivision 4 of section 46 of the Civil Code, which defines slander as "a false and unprivileged publication other than libel, which * * * imputes to [a person] * * * a want of chastity." The amended complaint alleges:

"That on the 29th day of May, 1919, while the plaintiff herein Floretta Martin was on her premises in the said city of Auburn, said county and state, the said defendant, Joseph Sutter, spoke of, to, and concerning said plaintiff Floretta Martin, the following language: 'You bitch,' 'you old hag,' thereby meaning by the use of the language aforesaid 'you bitch' that the said plaintiff Floretta Martin was and is a woman of unchaste character.

"That at the time the said words aforesaid were spoken of, to and concerning said plaintiff Floretta Martin, by defendant, Joseph Sutter, there were other and divers persons near and present who heard said defendant, Joseph Sutter, utter and address the language and expressions aforesaid of, to and concerning said plaintiff Floretta Martin, and that said persons so hearing said language and expressions so spoken and used as aforesaid by the said defendant understood and believed that defendant was imputing that said plaintiff Floretta Martin was a woman of unchaste character.

"That the usual and common meaning of the word 'bitch' when used of, to, and concerning a woman and person of the female sex by any other person in speaking of a woman and person of the female sex, in certain portions of the United States and particularly within the state of California, imputes to that woman or person of the female sex, of and concerning whom the said word 'bitch' is used and spoken, a want of chastity and that such woman or person of the female sex, of and concerning whom the said word 'bitch' is used and spoken, is a woman of unchaste character.

"That the said language aforesaid to wit: 'You bitch,' spoken of, to, and concerning said plaintiff Floretta Martin, by the defendant, Joseph Sutter, is false and untrue, and the imputation contained therein is false and untrue."

The defendant demurred to the complaint upon general and special grounds, and the demurrer was overruled. Thereupon he filed an answer specifically denying the allegations of the complaint. The cause was tried by a jury, to whom the following special issues were submitted upon the conclusion of the taking of testimony:

"1. Did the defendant call the plaintiff a bitch as charged in the complaint? Yes.
"W. F. Durfee, Foreman.

"2. Does the word 'bitch' have, within the state of California, the peculiar and local meaning of imputing a want of chastity to a woman when applied to her? Yes.
"W. F. Durfee, Foreman.

"3. If you find that the defendant used the language charged, then answer this question: Did the defendant by use of the language charged intend to imply that the plaintiff Mrs. Martin was an unchaste woman? No.
"W. R. Durfee, Foreman.

"4. If you find that the defendant used the language charged, then answer this question: Did the defendant, by the use of the language charged, intend only to apply to the plaintiff Mrs. Martin some coarse or offensive epithet without imputing to her a want of chastity? Yes. W. F. Durfee, Foreman.

"5. Did the witness W. W. White understand the language used by the defendant? Yes. W. F. Durfee, Foreman.

"6. Did the witness W. W. White understand the defendant to mean that the plaintiff Mrs. Martin was a woman of unchaste character? Yes. W. F. Durfee, Foreman.

"7. If you find that the defendant used the language charged, did he use such language with the evil purpose of slandering the plaintiff Mrs. Martin? No.
"W. F. Durfee, Foreman."

In addition to the special verdicts rendered in response to the foregoing interrogatories or special issues, the jury rendered its general verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for the sum of $750 "for the actual damages to the reputation of the plaintiff Mrs. Martin."

On motion the court rendered judgment in favor of the defendant non obstante veredicto upon the ground that the same was inconsistent with the findings of the jury upon certain of the special issues and directed judgment to be entered against the plaintiffs that they "take nothing herein and that the defendant do have and recover from the plaintiffs his costs herein," etc. The appeal is by the plaintiffs from said judgment, upon the judgment roll alone.

The ground upon which the court set aside the verdict, as indicated in its judgment, was that the "special verdicts of the jury are inconsistent with the general verdict of the jury * * * and that the special verdicts are consistent only with the judgment in favor of the defendant," etc.

[1] Preliminarily, we may dispose of the contention of the plaintiff that the special issues, Nos. 3, 4, and 7, "were superfluous and not pertinent to this case, because punitive or exemplary damages were neither asked of nor awarded by the jury," for which reason, so it is asserted, said issues should not have been submitted to the jury. We can see no merit in the contention. Section 625 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that in all cases other than in actions for the recovery of money only, or specific real property, "the court may direct the jury to find a special verdict in writing, upon all, or any of the issues, and in all cases may instruct them, if they render a general verdict, to find upon particular questions of fact, to be stated in writing, and may direct a written finding thereon." Said section further provides "where a special finding of facts is inconsistent with the general verdict, the former controls the latter, and the court must give judgment accordingly." The purpose to be subserved by submitting to the jury special issues or particular questions of fact is to test the validity of the general verdict—"that is to say, of determining whether all the facts essential to the support of the general verdict were established to the satisfaction of the jury by the evidence." O'Connell v. United Railroads, 19 Cal. App. 36, 46, 124 Pac. 1022, 1027; Plyler v. Pac., etc., Cement Co., 152 Cal. 125, 92 Pac. 56; Stein v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 379, 113 Pac. 663; Clementson on Special Verdicts, p. 107. It is thus manifest that special issues, or particular questions of fact, calling for answers as to facts without the proof of which the plaintiff could not support his action, may be submitted to a jury regardless of whether, as in cases of tort, exemplary or punitive damages may or may not properly be allowed or are within the calls of the complaint.

[2] The point first made by respondent is that the complaint does not state a cause of action for this reason: That the alleged slanderous language used to and concerning Mrs. Floretta Martin is not in and of itself actionable, or slanderous per se, and that there is an absence from the complaint of a statement, by way of an inducement, showing extrinsic facts or circumstances in connection with which the alleged slanderous words were used and which is necessary to show that the interpretation placed on said words by the innuendo is justified. There is force to this point; but it is not necessary to consider or pass definitely upon it herein, since the judgment must be affirmed upon the ground upon which the court below substituted it for the verdict returned by the jury. So far as we are advised, it has uniformly been held that the word "bitch" or "son of a bitch" is not actionable per se, and that when the former word is applied to a female it does not impute unchastity. Craig v. Pyles (Ky.) 39 S. W. 33; Jacobs v. Cater, 87 Minn. 448, 92 N. W. 397; Warren v. Ray, 155 Mich. 91, 118 N. W. 741, 130 Am. St. Rep. 566, 16 Ann. Cas. 513; Kerone v. Block, 144 Mo. App. 575, 129 S. W. 43; Sturdivant v. Duke, 155 Ky. 100, 159 S. W. 621, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 615, 25 Cyc. 322; Peters v. Garth, 50 S. W. 682, 20 Ky. Law Rep. 1934; Nealon v. Frisbie, 11 Misc. Rep. 12, 31 N. Y. Supp. 856; Blake v. Smith, 19 R. I. 476, 34 Atl. 995; Robertson v. Edelstein, 104 Wis. 440, 80 N. W. 724; K——— v. H———, 20 Wis. 289, 91 Am. Dec. 397; Newell, Slander and Libel, § 168, p. 187.

[3, 4] It is also established by the foregoing cases that the words spoken must be understood by those who heard them uttered in a slanderous sense. It is also the rule that when a slander or libel—

"is couched in language having a covert meaning not apparent upon its face, or in words or phrases not used otherwise than as slang, or cant terms, it is necessary for a plaintiff not only to allege and prove the slanderous or libelous sense in which the words were used by the defendant, but also that they were understood in the same sense by those to whom they were addressed." Edwards v. San Jose Printing & Publishing Society et al., 99 Cal. 431, 435, 34 Pac. 128, 129 (37 Am. St. Rep. 70).

In other words, as is said in Maynard v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 47 Cal. 207, quoting from the syllabi:

"When words which are not libelous per se contain a covert meaning which makes them libelous, it is necessary for the plaintiff to aver in his complaint that the words were intended by the defendant to be understood as imputing wrongdoing to the plaintiff, and that they were, in fact, so understood by those who read them."

See, also, Ingraham v. Lyon, 105 Cal. 254, 257, 38 Pac. 892.

[5, 6] It will be observed from the authorities just named that there are two elements essential to the establishment of a case for slander or libel where the alleged slanderous or libelous words used are not on their face or per se slanderous or libelous, viz.: First, that the utterer or publisher of the alleged slanderous or libelous words intended that they should be understood as imputing wrongdoing or wrong conduct to the plaintiff; second, that they were so understood by those who heard or read them. In this case, while the jury, in response to the special issues or particular questions of fact submitted to them, found that a witness who heard the words alleged to be slanderous uttered by the defendant, understood the defendant to mean by the use of said words that the plaintiff Mrs. Martin was a woman of unchaste character, likewise found that the defendant did not use the language charged with the evil purpose of slandering said plaintiff. In fact, the jury expressly found that the defendant did not intend by the use of the language charged to imply that Mrs. Martin was an unchaste woman.

Manifestly, these special findings are themselves inconsistent, and, as the court below found and adjudged, are palpably inconsistent with the general verdict. In such case, as section 625 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, the special findings of facts control the general verdict, and necessarily it was the duty of the court to give judgment accordingly.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

190 Cal. 326

Ex parte BURKE. (Cr. 2534.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1923. Rehearing Denied Feb. 8, 1923.)

1. Statutes ⟸51—Federal statute or one of another state may be declared law of the state.

In the absence of any constitutional prohibition, it is proper to declare that the law of the United States or of a sister state shall be the law of the state, and Const. art. 4, § 24, providing no law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title, is not such a prohibition.

2. Statutes ⟸51—Adoption of laws of another state may be done by reference as well as by setting out.

The adoption of a statute by the Legislature or Congress may be done by reference as well as by setting out at length, and this even where the statute adopted is the statute of another state or territory.

3. Statutes ⟸64(9) — Possible invalidity of clause adopting future enactments of Congress held not to invalidate adoption of present law.

The validity of an enactment adopting the provisions of the Volstead Act, enacted by Congress pursuant to the Eighteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution, is not affected by a clause purporting to adopt also the future provisions which may hereafter be enacted by Congress, though the invalidity of such clause be conceded, since it is not such a component part as would necessitate the holding that the entire act was invalid.

In Bank.

Application by Frank Burke for a writ of habeas corpus against the Chief of Police of the City and County of San Francisco. Prisoner remanded.

Wm. B. Hornblower and Fabian D. Brown, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Maurice E. Harrison, P. F. Dunne, Thos. B. Dozier, R. P. Henshall, Lewis F. Byington, J. J. Lermen, Chauncey F. Tramutolo, J. A. Mackenzie, J. W. Dorsey, Cushing & Cushing, and W. H. Metson, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner asks for his discharge on habeas corpus from an imprisonment under a charge of a violation of the Wright Act, so called, being an act of the Legislature submitted to a referendum at the last election and carried by the people. His principal point is that the act is void because it purports to enact into the law in this state all the penal provisions of the so-called Volstead Act (41 Stat. 305) being an act of Congress passed pursuant to the Eighteenth Amendment of the federal Constitution, and to enforce its provisions.

[1] The question whether a state may enact a law in that manner is not a new one in the jurisprudence of the United States. Wherever there is no constitutional provision which forbids it, it is proper to declare that any law of the United States, or of another state, shall be the law of this state. We find no constitutional provision in this state which forbids such action. That portion of section 24 of article 4 of the Constitution which reads as follows, to wit:

"No law shall be revised or amended by reference to its title; but in such case the act revised or section amended shall be re-enacted and published at length as revised or amended," does not prohibit that mode of legislation. It refers only to the revision or amendment of some law already enacted by our state Legislature, and has no reference to the enactment of a new provision. The principal that laws may be enacted in that fashion is well established. In People v. Whipple, 47 Cal. 592, it was held that it was proper for the Legislature, in creating an office, to define the duties of the incumbent by reference to an existing statute, and to provide that those duties shall be the same as those required by the act referred to. The principle is that such legislation may consist in readopting by its title the provisions of another act adopted by another state or by the United States. In Ex parte Lemon, 143 Cal. 558, 77 Pac. 455, 65 L. R. A. 946, it was held that the adoption of a particular title of the Political Code by reference only was legal. That case involved a special act adopted prior to the Constitution of 1879. The decision held that the Constitution of 1849 was the same as that of 1879 in this respect, and the act adopted as a part of the charter all the provisions of the title of the Political Code referred to without setting them out at length. In Vallejo, etc., R. R. Co. v. Reed Orchard Co., 177 Cal. 254, 170 Pac. 426, it was held that, where a statute by adoption designates and adopts an entire provision contained in a section of the Code by reference to its descriptive number, the statute so adopted by reference is the same as though the provision adopted has been bodily incorporated in the adopting statute.

[2] It is a general principle of law that in adopting a statute the Legislature or Congress may do so by reference, as well as by setting out the statute at length, and even where the statute adopted is the statute of another state or territory the principle is the same. Cathcart v. Robinson, 5 Pet. (30 U. S.) 264, 279, 8 L. Ed. 120; Robinson v. Belt, 187 U. S. 41, 47, 23 Sup. Ct. 16, 47 L. Ed. 65; Robinson v. Long Gas Co., 221 Fed. 398, 136 C. C. A. 642; State ex rel. Linthicum v. Board of Commissioners, 175 Ind. 400, 403, 94 N. E. 716; People v. Crossley, 261 Ill. 78, 83, 103 N. E. 537; Evans v. Illinois Surety Co., 298 Ill. 101, 106, 131 N.

E. 262; Hunt v. Tausick, 64 Wash. 69, 82, 116 Pac. 651, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 802.

[3] The second point which the petitioner urges is that the act is made void by reason of the fact that it adopts not only the existing provisions of the Volstead Act, but purports to adopt also the future provisions which may be hereafter enacted by Congress. It may be conceded that this provision is not valid, although we do not decide it, since it is not involved. The only effect of putting that provision into the statute would be, at most, that the provision itself would be void, leaving the remainder of the act valid. It is not such a component part of the act itself as would be necessary to require us to hold that it invalidated the entire act. In re Kinney (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 966. We find nothing in the act which makes the law invalid so far as it adopts the existing provisions of the Volstead Act.

The question whether the fines which are imposed under the penal provision of the act are payable to the United States or to the state may be a matter of dispute but it is not a question with which the petitioner is concerned. As soon as he pays the money he will be exonerated, and the disposition thereof is a matter to be determined hereafter.

The prisoner is remanded.

SHAW, C. J., and WILBUR, WASTE, LAWLOR, LENNON, SEAWELL, and KERRIGAN, JJ., concur.

---

190 Cal. 316

FLINN et al. v. SHAFTER REALTY CO.

(S. F. 9936.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 6, 1923. Rehearing Denied Feb. 5, 1923.)

Municipal corporations ⊂=446, 488, 489(7)—Failure to complete improvement within time fixed cannot be waived or cured by extension of time.

Under a provision of a street improvement ordinance adopted under the authority of San Francisco Charter, c. 2, art. 6, § 33, that the failure of the contractor to complete the contract within the time fixed or within such extension as was therein provided rendered the contract void, and that no assessment should be made for the work done under the contract, the failure to complete the contract within the time fixed, which expired before any extension was granted, was not a mere error or informality in the proceedings, and the defect could not be cured by failure of the property owners to appeal or by a subsequent extension of the time.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by James J. Flinn and another against the Shafter Realty Company to foreclose a street assessment lien. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Fabius T. Finch and Paul F. Fratessa, both of San Francisco, for appellants.

F. W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LAWLOR, J. Plaintiffs commenced this action to recover the amount of an assessment levied for street work done under a public contract in the city and county of San Francisco. The trial court found, and it is not questioned here, that the proceedings preliminary to the awarding of the contract were regular. The contract was awarded to plaintiffs by the said city and county on June 4, 1914, and required that the work be commenced within 15 days and completed within 90 days thereafter. On August 31, 1914, the board of public works passed a resolution recommending that the board of supervisors grant plaintiffs an extension of time of 60 days from September 2, 1914, for the completion of the work. Acting upon such recommendation, the board of supervisors passed a resolution extending the time for 60 days from September 2, 1914, but did not pass it until September 10, 1914, 8 days after the original 90-day period had expired. Various extensions of time were subsequently granted, and the work was completed on June 19, 1915, within the period of the last extension. On September 14, 1915, the work having been done in accordance with the specifications of the contract, an assessment was levied by the board of public works; among the lots assessed being one owned by defendant. No appeal was taken to the board of supervisors to have the assessment set aside, and it has never been set aside or altered.

Upon the trial it was found the assessment for street improvement was void because the work was not completed within the time specified in the contract or any legal extension thereof, and because the assessment was for more than one-half the assessed value of the property and did not provide for its payment in annual installments as provided by the charter of the city and county of San Francisco. Judgment was entered for defendant, from which plaintiffs appeal.

It is now conceded by respondent that, under the decision of this court in Federal Construction Co. v. Wolfson, 186 Cal. 267, 199 Pac. 512, the assessment was not void because in excess of one-half the assessed valuation of the property, inasmuch as the board of public works in its notice of intention to make the improvements provided that the amount of the assessment might be paid in six annual installments; the deferred payments to bear interest at the rate of 7 per centum per annum. Respondent claims, however, that the assessment was void because the resolution of September 10, 1914, extending appellants' time, was passed after the original period allowed for the completion of the work had expired, and at a time when, it is asserted, the contract was void and jurisdiction to make an extension had lapsed.

Section 33, art. 6, c. 2, of the Charter, empowers the board of supervisors to enact an ordinance providing a procedure for street work or street improvements and for the payment of the cost by assessments. Under this supervision the street improvement ordinance was adopted, section 14 of which is in part as follows:

"In case of failure on the part of the contractor or said contracting owners to complete his or their contract within the time fixed in the contract or within such extension of said time as is herein provided, his or their contract shall be void and no assessment shall be made for the work done under said contract."

Section 21 of the same ordinance provides that the owners of the assessed property,

"feeling aggrieved by any act or determination of the board of public works in relation thereto, or who claim that the work has not been performed according to the contract in a good and substantial manner, or having or making any objection to the correctness or legality of the assessment or other act, determination or proceeding of the said board, shall, within thirty days after the date of the warrant, appeal to the supervisors by briefly stating their objections in writing and filing the same with the clerk of said supervisors. * * *

"All the decisions and determinations of the supervisors, upon notice and hearing as aforesaid, shall be final and conclusive upon all persons entitled to appeal under the provisions of this section as to all errors, informalities and irregularities which the supervisors might have avoided or have remedied during the progress of the proceedings, or which they can at that time remedy."

It is further provided in the same section that no assessment shall be held invalid by any court for any error, informality, or other defect, where the resolution of intention of the board of public works to recommend the improvement has been published and posted and the notice of improvement posted.

Many cases have been considered by this court which involved a failure to secure a renewal of a contract for street work under the Vrooman Act (Stats. 1885, p. 147) and the Improvement Act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 730) before the expiration of the time allowed for completion of the work, but this is the first time it has been necessary to decide the effect of such a procedure under the street improvement ordinance of the city and county of San Francisco.

Respondent's contention is that by virtue of section 14 of the street improvement ordinance the contract appellants had with the city and county became void immediately upon the expiration of the time allowed for completing the work, that the board of supervisors had no power to restore it after that time, and that no curative clause could validate the extension. Many of the earlier cases decided under the Vrooman Act are cited in support of this contention, and reliance is placed on the statement contained in Federal Construction Co. v. Newhouse, 186 Cal. 284, 199 Pac. 519, that—

"In this connection it should be observed that while the curative clause of the statute therein considered (Stats. 1911, p. 730, § 26) is the same as in the street improvement ordinance of San Francisco, section 14 of the ordinance expressly provides that 'in case of failure on the part of the contractor * * * to complete * * * his contract within the time fixed in the contract, or within such extension of said time, * * * his * * * contract shall be void, and no assessment shall be made for the work done under said contract.' Whether in the light of this legislative declaration a failure to complete the work within the time indicated could be declared an error, irregularity, or informality, is a question we need not determine, but one which may well command the attention of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco."

Appellants' contention is that under the curative provision of section 21 of the street improvement ordinance all objections that the work was not completed within the contract time were waived by a failure to appeal to the board of supervisors, and that the extension of the time was an informality for which the assessment may not be set aside. It is insisted section 14 of the street improvement ordinance is a legislative as distinguished from a constitutional provision, and that therefore a failure to comply with it can be cured by section 21 under the rule laid down in Watkinson v. Vaughn, 182 Cal. 55, 186 Pac. 753.

But in our opinion it is plain from the language of section 14 that a failure of the board of supervisors to grant an extension of time within the original period is not an error or informality within the meaning of the street improvement ordinance which can be cured under section 21. In the absence of such a curative clause or through a failure to apply it, it has been held a contract becomes void, and jurisdiction to extend it lost, upon the expiration of the time originally allowed. Beveridge v. Livingstone, 54 Cal. 54; Mahoney v. Braverman, 54 Cal. 565; Fanning v. Schammel, 68 Cal. 428, 9 Pac. 427; Dougherty v. Coffin, 69 Cal. 454, 10 Pac. 672; Raisch v. San Francisco, 80 Cal. 1, 22 Pac. 22; Dougherty v. Nevada Bank, 81 Cal. 162, 22 Pac. 513; Kelso v. Cole, 121 Cal. 121, 53

Pac. 353. In Oakland Paving Co. v. Whittell Realty Co., 185 Cal. 113, 195 Pac. 1058, it was held that under the Improvement Act of 1911, which contained a curative clause (section 26) similar to that of the street improvement ordinance, such a failure was an error or informality which could be cured under the provisions of the said section and on account of which a court could not set aside an assessment.

In addition to a curative clause, however, the street improvement ordinance has added the provision that the contract shall become void if the work is not completed within the time prescribed and that no assessment shall be made for any work done under it. Considering the earlier cases cited above holding that a contract became void upon the expiration of the time limit and the conclusion that under the Improvement Act of 1911 a failure to secure a renewal until after the original time had elapsed did not invalidate an assessment, it must be held that in adopting section 14 it was not intended such an irregularity should come within the "errors" and "informalities" which might be cured. This was in effect to adopt the rule followed in the earlier cases, under which rule the board of supervisors would be without jurisdiction to extend a contract upon the expiration of the time allowed; the contract would expire and be beyond the reach of a curative clause.

As the board was without authority to extend the contract after the original time allowed had passed, the work was not done within the time fixed in the contract or an extension thereof, the contract became void under section 14 of the street improvement ordinance, and the assessment must be held to be invalid.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; WASTE, J.; LENNON, J.; WARD, J.

---

190 Cal. 329

ATLAS DEVELOPMENT CO. v. NATIONAL SURETY CO. (S. F. 10094.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 9, 1923. Rehearing Denied Feb. 8, 1923.)

1. Attachment ⊂=360—Upon rendition of judgment for defendant and discharge of attachment, defendant entitled to recover costs and damages.

Where, in action in which property was attached, judgment was rendered for defendant discharging the attachment on ground that plaintiff was not entitled thereto under Code Civ. Proc. § 537, defendant thereupon became entitled to recover from plaintiff its costs and damages from the attachment.

2. Attachment ⊂=375(3)—Reasonable value of use of property is proper measure of damages.

A proper and recognized measure of damages for the wrongful taking or detention of personal property, as by attachment, is the reasonable value of the use of the property during the period of detention.

3. Attachment ⊂=351—Damage from inability to carry out contract of sale of attached property too speculative and uncertain.

Where oil-drilling machinery and equipment which were attached had been sold by the owner to a corporation organized for oil development, for 50,000 shares of its stock, the damages from inability to carry out and realize on the contract were too remote, speculative, and uncertain, particularly when not within the contemplation of the surety on the attachment bond.

4. Attachment ⊂=350—That oil rig could not be used in particular locality not conclusive that right to use had no value.

That an attached oil rig could not be used further in the county where it was when attached did not show that the right to possess and use it had no value, if there was any locality within practical shipping distance where it was in demand, and would command an ascertainable price.

5. Attachment ⊂=351—That owner of attached property was planning speculative sale or gratuitous loan does not prevent recovery of value of use.

That the owner of an attached oil rig had plans for its disposal involving a speculative sale, or even a gratuitous loan, did not prevent recovery of the reasonable market value of its use on the attachment bond.

6. Evidence ⊂=10(1), 18—Judicial notice taken of location of oil fields and that cost of transportation of oil rig would not reduce damage below amount of judgment.

The court may take judicial notice of the location of the various and numerous oil fields of California, and, on the basis of common knowledge, may conclude that, where an oil rig detained by attachment for 78 days had a usable value of $50 a day, the cost of transporting it from Contra Costa county to an oil field would not reduce the aggregate value of the use below the amount of a judgment for $1,000.

7. Attachment ⊂=351—Usable value of property held rental value less cost of transportation to place of demand.

The usable value of an attached oil rig in a county where it could not be used would be its rental value where needed, less the reasonable cost of removing it to the place of use.

8. Evidence ⊂=320—Testimony as to rental value of oil rig based on information obtained by talking with others held not hearsay.

The testimony of the president and active manager of a corporation owning an oil rig as to the loss per day by reason of its attachment when based on talks had with various oil men held not inadmissible as hearsay.

---

9. Attachment ⊜349—Complaint on bond not alleging nonpayment of damages and costs by principal insufficient.

In an action on an attachment bond conditioned that the principal would pay all costs awarded to defendant, and all damages sustained by reason of the attachment, the complaint stated no cause of action where it did not allege that the principal had not made such payment.

10. Appeal and error ⊜1170(3)—Error in overruling demurrer to complaint not alleging essential fact held not miscarriage of justice.

Though complaint in action on attachment bond failed to allege that the principal had not paid the damages and costs, where it definitely alleged damage from the attachment, and defendant, after overruling of the demurrer, answered and specifically denied any damage, and at the trial devoted its efforts to showing that the attached property had no usable value, and that plaintiff was not damaged, error in overruling the demurrer held not a miscarriage of justice requiring a reversal under Const. art. 6, § 4½, and Code Civ. Proc. § 475, defendant not having been deceived or misled by the imperfection of the pleading.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; A. F. St. Sure, Judge.

Action by the Atlas Development Company against the National Surety Company. From a judgment on a directed verdict for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Henry C. McPike, of Oakland, for appellant.

Dunn, White & Aiken, of Oakland, for respondent.

WASTE, J. This appeal is by the defendant from a directed verdict and judgment in favor of plaintiff in a suit on an attachment bond.

The facts leading up to the present action are that for some time prior to November 12, 1919, the plaintiff had been engaged in drilling for oil in Contra Costa county and owned and used for the purpose certain oil drilling machinery and equipment. It was about to abandon this enterprise and was starting to dismantle the rig and outfit preparatory to placing it on board the cars at Antioch, in said county, for delivery in the state of Texas to one Charles L. Morrill under a contract of sale. On the date above stated one Nellie Wheelock, an assignee, commenced an action against the plaintiff here for work and labor performed by her assignor, and caused an attachment to be levied on the rig and outfit at the oil well. The defendant became surety upon the attachment bond for $1,000. Subsequently the action of Wheelock v. Atlas Development Company was tried and decided in defendant's favor, and it was therein adjudged that plaintiff take nothing by her complaint, and that the defendant have judgment for its costs, and that the attachment theretofore filed upon the property be, and the same was, discharged, for the reason that plaintiff was not entitled thereto under the provisions of section 537 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] Under this state of facts the defendant became entitled to recover from the plaintiff its costs and damages sustained by reason of the attachment.

The present action was thereafter begun against the surety company upon the obligation of the attachment bond.

The complaint alleges as damages arising from the attachment suit that plaintiff was deprived of the use and possession of said rig and outfit for a period of 78 days, and that the reasonable usable value of the same was $50 per day during said period. Other claims by way of special damages were alleged, but these were subsequently waived, and the directed verdict for $1,000, the full penalty of the attachment undertaking, was based solely upon the value of the use of the property while detained under the writ.

[2] We are of the opinion that this point was correctly decided. There is no ground to question that a proper and recognized measure of damages for the wrongful taking or detention of personal property is the reasonable value of the use of the property during the period of detention. Hurd v. Barnhart, 53 Cal. 97; McGill v. W. P. Fuller & Co., 45 Wash. 615, 88 Pac. 1038; McCarthy v. Boothe, 2 Cal. App. 170, 83 Pac. 175; 6 Corp. Jur. 539; Sutherland on Damages (4th Ed.) §§ 512, 513.

[3, 4] It is contended under the facts in this case that the property taken under attachment had no rental value as it was then situated. It had been in use by the plaintiff in unsuccessfully exploring for oil in a field where no oil has been found. The work had been abandoned and the oil rig was being taken down for removal. The plaintiff had entered into a contract to sell the outfit to a corporation to be organized in Texas for oil development in that state and was to be paid with 50,000 shares of the corporation stock. It is urged on behalf of defendant that the plaintiff could make no further use of this property in Contra Costa county, but was bound by its contract to ship it to Texas, and that its damages, if any, were through being prevented from carrying out and realizing on its contract. It is clear at once that such a measure of damages, particularly when not shown to have been within the contemplation of the surety corporation, would be remote, speculative, and uncertain. If the fact of the location of this property in an unproductive field and the existence of a contract to remove it to Texas could be considered for any purpose, it would be to admit the evidence of the rental value of such an oil rig in Texas. On the other hand, the fact that the oil rig could not be used further in Contra Costa county does not indicate that its adaptability and commercial requirements for use elsewhere would not give value to the right to possess and use it. One might own a snowplow in the Imperial Valley or a sawmill in the Mojave Desert, yet their possession could not be said to be without value if there was any locality within practical shipping distance where such machinery was in demand and would command an ascertainable price.

[5] Neither would the fact that the owner had other plans for its disposal which involved a speculative sale, or even the gratuitous loan of his property, prevent his recovery of the reasonable market value of its use.

In this case the undisputed testimony is to the effect that in the oil fields of California, as well as those of Texas, such an oil rig outfit has the rental value of from $100 to $125 per day. The plaintiff, for the purposes of this case, placed the value at $50 per day for the 78 days, showing at this rate an aggregate amount over three times as great as the judgment.

[6] It is true that no deduction was made from the values testified to for cost of transporting the outfit to oil fields where it would be in demand. But the courts may take judicial notice of the location of the various and numerous oil fields of California, and it may be safely concluded on the basis of common knowledge that the cost of transportation would not reduce the aggregate of the values testified to below the $1,000 of the judgment.

[7] We cannot assent to the doctrine advanced that, because there was no rental market for such an oil rig in Contra Costa county, it must be held to have been without such value, when the evidence showed that there was a demand for such property in available parts of the state at a minimum rate of $50 per day. The value of such an outfit in Contra Costa county would be such rental value where needed, less the reasonable cost of removing it to the place of use.

[8] The witness Moberry, who testified as to the value of the use of the oil rig in California, was the president of the plaintiff, the owner of the outfit, and appears to have been its active manager. He ascertained by talking to various oil men from Texas and California that the usable value of the rig during the time it was under attachment was $100 a day, and that that was the customary price per day for such an outfit. Basing his acknowledge on these inquiries, he estimated the loss to the plaintiff by reason of the attachment as $50 per day. Appellant contends that this testimony was hearsay, and that its motion to strike it out should have been granted. We do not agree with this contention. The witness Cardwell, who testified as to the rental value of such an outfit in Texas, appears to have been well acquainted with what the reasonable daily market value of such a rig would be in that state.

[9, 10] Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it did not state a cause of action, and the overruling of such demurrer is assigned as error. The complaint contains no allegation of the breach of the condition on which the surety company was to become liable on its undertaking. The condition of the bond is that the plaintiff in the attachment suit will pay all costs that may be awarded to the defendant and all damages sustained by reason of the attachment. There is no averment in the complaint that such plaintiff had not made the payment. Without an allegation of default on the part of the principal in the condition on which the obligation of the bond was to accrue no cause of action is stated. It was so held in Morgan v. Menzies, 60 Cal. 341, which was an action brought upon attachment bond, and involved the precise question we are now considering. The demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. An examination of the record, however, convinces us that the case should not be reversed for that reason. The complaint contains sufficient averments of the execution of the undertaking here sued upon, the subsequent seizure and levy of the attachment by the sheriff in the attachment suit, and of the fact that on the trial of the action the plaintiff here recovered a judgment dismissing the attachment on the ground that the plaintiff in the attachment suit was not entitled thereto. Then follows succinct and definite allegations of the damage suffered by the plaintiff by reason of the wrongful attachment, through being deprived of the use of the oil rig and outfit, the reasonable usable value of which is alleged to be the sum of $50 per day during the 78 days the same was unlawfully held under the attachment proceedings. Its general demurrer being overruled, the defendant answered and denied generally and specifically that the plaintiff was damaged by reason of the attachment in any of the particulars mentioned in the complaint. At the trial the efforts of the defendant appear to have been devoted to showing that the rig and outfit had no usable value at the place where it was resting at the time the attachment was placed upon it, and consequently the plaintiff was not damaged by its detention. Having acted upon the theory that the issue as to its liability by reason of the alleged damage suffered by the plaintiff was sufficiently raised by the complaint, the defendant was not deceived or misled by the imperfection of the pleading, and under the oft-cited sections of the Code and Constitution, no miscarriage of justice having resulted, the error should be disregarded. Code Civ. Proc. § 475; Const. art. 6, § 4½.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; WILBUR, J.

---

190 Cal. 336

HONEY v. PACIFIC AUTOMOBILE INDEMNITY EXCH. et al. (L. A. 7281.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 11, 1923. Rehearing Denied Feb. 8, 1923.)

1. Insurance ⟸508—Auto fire insurance held not limited until completion of all repairs.

In a policy insuring an automobile against damage by collision or loss or damage by fire, a provision that the liability of the insurer shall be reduced by the amount of any property loss or damage until repairs have been completed or parts replaced, when it shall attach for the amounts originally written, does not reduce the amount of insurance against loss by fire after a collision by the total amount paid as loss resulting from the collision until all repairs have been completed and all parts replaced, but, in the event of a fire occurring after some of the repairs had been completed and liability incurred therefor, insured can recover the full loss less the cost of completing the repairs.

2. Livery stable and garage keepers ⟸8(1)—Repairs to automobile entitle workers to possessory lien.

Those performing the work and furnishing the parts necessary for repair of an automobile have a possessory lien thereon for the cost of the repairs.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by A. H. Honey against the Pacific Automobile Indemnity Exchange and another, upon a policy of fire insurance. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. T. Morrow and David D. Stuart, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

C. Hughes Jordan, Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, and F. Walton Brown, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, J. In this action, to recover on a policy of insurance on an automobile issued by the defendants, the plaintiff recovered judgment for $903.50 for loss occasioned by fire. Defendants appeal, claiming that their liability does not exceed the sum of $500.

Among other provisions the policy indemnified against loss or damage by collision, and covered loss or damage by fire. The maximum fire risk assumed by the insurer was limited to $1,500 in excess of $1,000 insurance permitted to be carried elsewhere. Soon after its purchase the automobile was badly damaged by collision, and the defendant paid plaintiff $1,000 for the loss occasioned thereby. Plaintiff then took the automobile to a repair shop for the purpose of having the car repaired. All of the repairs were completed and all parts replaced. Mechanically the car was as good as new, according to competent testimony, and it "fell short of being equal to new in condition" only because whatever painting of the car was required had not been done. After being tested, the car was taken to a paint shop, where the fire occurred. It was partially destroyed, and was eventually sold for $300. The plaintiff received $1,000 from the excess insurance carrier, and seeks in this action to recover from the defendants the balance of the loss sustained.

The plaintiff paid $2,575 for the automobile. He added to its equipment certain accessories, the total cost being $2,845. After the purchase the selling price advanced, and the cost of a car of like type and model, with the same equipment, was $2,950 at the time of the fire. Certain of the accessories, amounting in value to $147.50, were not with the car when the fire occurred. The painting job would cost $54. The court found the value of the car, with the repairs which had been completed, and the parts which had been replaced, after deducting $54 for the painting which had not been done, and the sum of $147.50 for the equipment which had been removed, to be the sum of $2,203.50. Deducting from that sum the $300 received by plaintiff as the salvage of the car after the fire, and the further sum of $1,000 paid on the loss by the carrier of the excess insurance, the court entered judgment against defendants for $903.50.

A stipulation of the policy provides that the liability of the insurer "shall be reduced by the amount of any property loss or damage until repairs have been completed or parts replaced, when it shall attach for amounts originally written." Appellants take the position that, having paid the plaintiff the sum of $1,000 for the property loss and damage caused by the collision, the $1,500 liability under the policy for loss by fire was thereby reduced by that amount until all repairs to the automobile were completed, and all parts replaced. The painting not being done, and certain parts of the equipment not having been put back in place pending the painting job, they refuse to pay any sum over $500 in satisfaction of plaintiff's claim.

[1] We do not construe the quoted provision of the policy as appellants would have us do. If, immediately following the adjustment of the loss and damage suffered by reason of the collision, and the payment of the $1,000 by defendants, and before any repairs had been completed or any parts had been replaced, the fire had occurred, the contention of the appellants would be sound. Under such contingency the plaintiff would suffer a loss for which he had, to the extent of the payment of the $1,000, been already indemnified. The plaintiff contracted a liability to pay for the repairs actually made, and parts furnished. The record indicates that bills for such repairs and parts were furnished to him, and that he paid or settled therefor. By assuming the position they have, appellants admit that the exact moment all repairs were completed and parts furnished full liability under the policy would attach. But the provision of the policy is not that all repairs must be made, and all parts replaced.

[2] We are of the opinion that, from the moment progressive repairs to the car were finally completed, and various needed parts were actually replaced, the value of the car was to that extent increased, and the liability of the insurer correspondingly extended until such time as the car was fully restored to the condition in which it was before the collision, at which time the liability would attach for the full amount originally written in the policy. What actually occurred in this case emphasizes the point. The necessary repairs to the body of the car and its fenders were made at one garage. Other repairs were done and needed parts furnished at a second. Each job was a completed transaction, for the cost of which the plaintiff became liable, and to secure payment for which those performing the work and furnishing the parts had a possessory lien on the automobile, had they chosen to exercise it. Mortgage Securities Co. v. Pfaffmann, 177 Cal. 109, 169 Pac. 1033, L. R. A. 1918D, 118; Union Machine Co. v. Chicago Bonding Co., 36 Cal. App. 585, 172 Pac. 1113. When, as in this case, all repairs have been made, and all damaged parts of the car have been replaced, and nothing remains to be done but a small part of the work of restoring the car to its former perfect condition, the position of appellants becomes untenable. The fire loss suffered by plaintiff was less than the actual value of the car with repairs actually made and parts replaced. Under these circumstances the most appellants can claim is a pro tanto reduction of liability to the extent of the value of any repairs yet to be made, and of parts still to be replaced. The trial court was of that view. It gave appellants the benefit of such reduction, and allowed the value of the accessories and equipment not destroyed by the fire. Its ruling was correct. Such construction is reasonable and just to both parties to the contract. It is not necessary, in laying down such rule of law in a case of first instance in this court, to seek to justify its assertion by recourse to the well-established principles that policies of insurance are to be construed liberally in favor of the assured, and that any uncertainty or ambiguity in such contracts must be construed most strongly against the insurer. The plain reading of the provision in the policy, in the light of the purposes for which the separable contracts of indemnity against loss are intended, justifies the construction placed thereon by the lower court.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

190 Cal. 321

KING et al. v. RAILROAD COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA. (S. F. 10291.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1923.)

1. Waters and water courses ⇐257(1)—Contract rates for water delivered by public utility can be changed by Commission.

The rates fixed by contract for the delivery of water by a company engaged in furnishing water to lands in the vicinity as a public utility can be changed by the Railroad Commission under its power of regulation and control.

2. Waters and water courses ⇐257(1)—Riparian rights of landowners held not to affect right to change contract rates for delivery of water.

That some of the landowners who contracted with a public utility for the delivery of water to their lands were riparian owners does not affect the right of the Commission to change the rates fixed by the contracts, where no mention was made in the contract that those landowners were riparian owners, and their riparian rights in the stream were not affected thereby.

In Bank.

Petition for certiorari by J. R. King and others against the Railroad Commission of the State of California, to review an order of the Commission increasing rates for furnishing water to be paid by petitioners to the Sutter-Butte Canal Company. Application denied.

King & King, of Gridley, Devlin & Brookman, of San Francisco, and Henry Ingram, of Gridley, for Sutter-Butte Canal Co.

F. S. Brittain, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

Hugh Gordon, William W. Clary, and Carl I. Wheat, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an application by way of writ of review to this court for an order reviewing and annulling an order of the Railroad Commission, made and entered on April 26, 1922, increasing the rates for water to be paid by these petitioners to Sutter-Butte Canal Company, for the service of water for irrigation supplied to the lands of these petitioners by said canal company.

The petitioners herein are the holders of contracts with the said Sutter-Butte Canal Company or its predecessors in the appropriation and supply of water for purposes of irrigation to the region in which the respective holdings of these petitioners are located. The petitioners King and Room set forth, in substance, in their said application that in the year 1905 they became the purchasers, respectively, from a certain corporation known as the California Irrigated Land Company, of certain described tracts of land in a certain colony known as Gridley Colony No. 2, in Butte county, which corporation was then the holder, as a subsidiary corporation, of the Butte County Canal Company, of a contract with said Butte County Canal Company, which provided that the Butte County Land Company would furnish water for irrigation to the lands in said colony in an amount to be required, not exceeding one cubic foot per second for each 160 acres, for which said land company agreed to pay to said water company annually at the rate of $1 per acre; that said water right thus created was to be appurtenant to the land upon which the water furnished thereunder was delivered, and that the said water charges, if unpaid, were to be a lien upon such land.

As to the applicants J. P. Hopkins and Hazel S. Hopkins, the application herein shows that in the year 1905 they were, and have since been, the owners of certain lots and parcels of land in certain other larger tracts in Butte county, which tracts were entitled, by virtue of location, to certain riparian rights in the waters of the Feather river, to a portion or share in which these particular applicants had a vested interest. They then allege and show that in that year they entered into a certain contract with the said Butte County Canal Company by which, for a consideration of $2,610 in money paid by them to the said canal company and of the grant of a right of way for a main canal across their said lands, they received from said canal company a contract for the delivery of water on their said lands at the annual rate of $1 per acre, which said contract was otherwise in substantially the same form as that in which the applicants King and Room had acquired a beneficial interest by virtue of their purchases of their holdings in the Gridley Colony No. 2.

The applicant Gibson herein was a purchaser of a certain portion of their said holdings from Hopkins, and claims to have succeeded thereby to an interest in the latter's riparian rights in said river, and also to the interest in his said water rights contract appurtenant to the lands he had acquired.

The petitioners further allege that the Sutter-Butte Canal Company, as the successor of the Butte County Canal Company, presented an application before the Railroad Commission in the early part of the year 1922 for a general increase in their water rates applicable to all of their consumers; that the petitioners herein were parties to said proceeding, and appeared therein protesting against such increase in water rates and setting forth in their pleadings filed before the Commission in furtherance of such protests that they and each of them were the holders of vested contract rights by virtue of their said contract with the Butte County Canal Company, which the Railroad Commission had no jurisdiction to change or modify by any increase in the water rates provided for in such contracts. The protestants Hopkins and Gibson further protested against any such increase in water rates upon the ground that their particular contracts with the Butte County Canal Company related to the delivery to their lands of the waters of the Feather river, in which they had riparian rights, and that by said contracts the said canal company had agreed to divert and deliver to them from said river the water in which they had such riparian rights, at rates which the Railroad Commission had no jurisdiction to alter or increase. The Railroad Commission, upon the hearing upon the said application of the Sutter-Butte Canal Company and the opposition thereto filed by these petitioners, overruled their said objections and proceeded by its order made and entered on April 26, 1922, to grant the application of said canal company for a general increase in its water rates. After the denial of a petition for a rehearing on the part of these petitioners, the present application for a writ of review was presented by them to this court.

[1] Upon the hearing upon said application and in the briefs of the applicants filed in support thereof, these petitioners as a whole contend that at the time their respective water rights contracts were entered into the Butte County Canal Company was not a public utility in so far as their water rights were concerned, and, hence, that their respective contract rights, and particularly the specific water rates provided for therein, were not subject to the regulation and control of the Railroad Commission. This contention presents the first question for review. In dealing with this question we do not regard it as necessary to repeat or rehearse in this opinion what was said by this court upon an almost identical state of facts in the case of Butte County Water Users' Ass'n v. Railroad Commission, 185 Cal. 218, 196 Pac. 265. It may be true that the petitioners herein were not parties to that proceeding, but practically every fact attending the history of the Butte County Canal Company, from the inception of its project to supply water to the region wherein the lands of these petitioners lie, was presented to this court in that proceeding, and this court upon those facts as thus presented held that said canal company was organized as, and has always been, a public utility supplying water for irrigation in the counties of Butte and Sutter. Furthermore, the same facts which were embraced in the record before this court in that proceeding were presented in evidence before the Railroad Commission in the proceeding before that body, to which these petitioners were parties, and which they now seek to have reviewed, and the Commission, upon such presentation and on the authority of the decision of this court above referred to, held that the Butte County Canal Company had been from its inception a public utility, and that these petitioners, in receiving their respective contracts for the service of water upon their respective parcels of land had dealt with the said Butte County Canal Company in its already acquired capacity of a public utility, and hence that the water rates of the contract holders of said canal company, including those of these petitioners, were subject, as to the rates for water provided for therein, to the control and regulation of the Railroad Commission. In our opinion, therefore, this question is conclusively determined, in so far as these petitioners are concerned, adversely to their present contention. These petitioners have relied, in making said contention, upon an alleged identity in the facts surrounding their acquisition of whatever rights they claim under these said contracts with those considered by this court in deciding the case of Allen v. Railroad Commission, 179 Cal. 68, 175 Pac. 466, 3 A. L. R. 249, but the facts as found by the Railroad Commission in the proceeding now under review do not in certain essential particulars sustain their said contention, since in the Allen Case the contracts which the petitioners therein asserted were made while that company was a private concern as to the water they disposed of. That company was not a public utility at all, except as to a small quantity of water devoted to the use of a small village. The water it dealt in with the other users had never been dedicated to public use.

[2] The conclusion we thus arrive at disposes of every contention of the petitioners in this proceeding except the claim urged by the petitioners Hopkins and Gibson that their contracts were peculiar in the respect that, at the time they were entered into, Hopkins was owner of riparian rights in the Feather river, from which the Butte County Land Company derived, by appropriation, the water which it proposed to distribute, and, hence, that contracting with Hopkins to serve his lands with water the said canal company was engaging to furnish him with his own water through its system upon terms which the Railroad Commission had no authority to change. There is no merit in this contention. The contract of Hopkins with the Butte County Canal Company makes no reference to any riparian water rights owned or held by Hopkins and does not purport to deliver to him any of the waters of said river covered by his alleged riparian rights. It is in the usual form of the other contracts which said public utility entered into with its customers at or about the same time, and only purports to deliver to him a certain annual supply of the water which said canal company had acquired by appropriation, which in no wise interfered with whatever riparian rights Hopkins had in the waters of said river. Whatever rights he thus had he and his successor in interest, Gibson, still have, unaffected by said contracts or by the action of the Railroad Commission in attempting an increase in the water rates provided for therein.

We do not deem it necessary to deal with the other question presented by the respondents herein as to the effect of an earlier order of the Commission increasing the water rates of these petitioners, in which they are asserted to have concurred by the payment of the rates provided therein so as to estop them from asserting in the present proceeding that the canal company dealt with them, in entering into said contracts, otherwise than as a public utility.

The application is denied.

SHAW, C. J., and LAWLOR, WILBUR, LENNON, and WASTE, J., concur.

(190 Cal. 341)

CHARLTON SILK CO. v. JONES et al. (S. F. 6523.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1923.)

1. Commerce ⟸40(2)—Sales through traveling salesman from another state held "interstate commerce."

Sale of goods through traveling salesman of a manufacturer whose principal place of business was in another state, where it was engaged in the manufacture, such solicitors receiving the orders and sending them to the other states when the goods so ordered were shipped, constituted "interstate commerce."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Interstate Commerce.]

2. Commerce ⟸8(1) — Federal law controls collection of proceeds of interstate commerce.

Civ. Code, § 405, does not apply to the right to collect proceeds on sale of goods constituting interstate commerce; such right being incidental to the commerce, and the federal law controlling.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by the Charlton Silk Company against John R. Jones, administrator, and another. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Nowlin, Fassett & Little and Ernest K. Little, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

C. M. Jennings, of San Francisco, for respondents.

Henry G. W. Dinkelspiel and John R. Jones, both of San Francisco, William T. Craig and John E. Carson, both of Los Angeles, and W. P. Smith, of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

WILBUR, C. J. [1, 2] This is an action to recover the purchase price of goods, wares, and merchandise. The action was begun June 27, 1910, before the enactment of the Statutes of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 381) repealing sections 405, 406, 408, 409, and 410 of the Civil Code. The court found that the plaintiff's principal place of business was the city of Chicago, state of Illinois, where it was engaged in the manufacture and sale of drygoods at wholesale.

"That the plaintiff sent out traveling salesmen to California and said traveling salesmen solicited and received orders for merchandise and sent said orders to the plaintiff in Chicago, and the goods so ordered were then shipped by the plaintiff to its customers in California."

This finding establishes the fact that the business done was in interstate commerce, and that therefore the provisions of sections 405 et seq., Civil Code, do not apply because the right to collect the proceeds of interstate commerce was incidental thereto and cannot be prevented by state legislation. Sioux Remedy Co. v. Cope, 235 U. S. 197, 35 Sup. Ct. 57, 59 L. Ed. 193; W. W. Kimball Co. v. Read, 43 Cal. App. 342, 185 Pac. 192; Moon v. Martin, 185 Cal. 361, 197 Pac. 77.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: LAWLOR, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; SEAWELL, J.; MYERS, J.; WASTE, J.

(190 Cal. 340)

DABNEY v. WILHELM et al. (L. A. 7259.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 12, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸939—Assumed no judgment entered when clerk's certificate mentions none, and appeal purports to have been taken from order.

Where the clerk's certificate to the purported judgment roll makes no mention of any judgment, and the appeal purports to have been taken from a judgment and order sustaining defendant's objection to the taking of any testimony, it may be assumed that no judgment was entered.

2. Appeal and error ⟸70(½)—Order sustaining objections to taking of testimony for insufficiency of complaint not appealable.

No appeal lies from an order sustaining an objection to the taking of any testimony on the ground that the complaint does not state a cause of action, as such an order is not mentioned among the interlocutory orders which Code Civ. Proc. § 963, makes the subject of appeal.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by Joseph B. Dabney against Henry Wilhelm and others. From an order, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

Robert M. Pease, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Claud B. Andrews, Carnahan & Clark, and John C. Gillham, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

WASTE, J. The plaintiff brought an action seeking to compel specific preformance of an alleged agreement made by certain of the defendants to enter into an oil lease. A general demurrer to the amended complaint was overruled, and the defendants answered. The case came on for trial, and stipulations as to further amendments to the complaint and as to certain facts were filed. Defendants thereupon objected to the taking of any testimony, on the ground that the amended complaint did not state a cause of action, and the court sustained the objection. The plaintiff is here seeking a reversal of that order.

"The appeal, of course," he says, "is taken on the judgment roll."

[1, 2] An examination of the record brought here in the transcript discloses that apparently no judgment was ever entered in the case. We may well assume that to be the fact, for the clerk's certificate to the purported judgment roll makes no mention of such judgment and, according to the notice, the appeal is taken "from the judgment and order sustaining the objection to the taking of any testimony in said cause, and from the whole thereof"; further reference being made to the minute order of the court sustaining the objection to the taking of testimony. No appeal lies from such order. Code Civ. Proc. § 963. It is not one mentioned among the interlocutory orders which the statute makes the subject of appeal. It may be reviewed upon appeal from the judgment as an intermediate order which necessarily affects the judgment. Clifford v. Allman, 84 Cal. 528, 533, 24 Pac. 292; Swain v. Burnette, 76 Cal. 299, 302, 18 Pac. 394.

The appeal is dismissed.

We concur: SHAW, C. J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

190 Cal. 348

McCLURE v. ALBERTI et al. (L. A. 7214.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 23, 1923. Rehearing Denied Feb. 16, 1923.)

1. Sales ⟸93—Evidence held to sustain finding contract was mutually abandoned.

Evidence that, after a contract for the sale of grapes had been partly performed, the remaining grapes in the seller's vineyard were damaged by rain, and the buyer directed the seller to fill the boxes of the buyer he had on hand, and that would terminate the deal, sustains a finding that the contract was abandoned by mutual agreement; it not showing merely an alteration of the terms thereof.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1041(4)—Amendment of complaint to conform to proof held not prejudicial to defendants.

An amendment to the complaint to conform to the proof was not prejudicial to defendants assuming that an additional issue was tendered thereby, where all the facts were before the court, and its findings established the liability of defendants under either the original or amended issues, so that the judgment will not be reversed because of error in striking out the demurrer and answer to the amended complaint.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court Los Angeles County; J. L. Fleming, Judge pro tem.

Action by Nellie M. McClure against Robert Alberti and another, copartners. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

H. A. Massey, John L. Richardson, and Geo. S. Hupp, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Charles Robert McCarty and William C. Jensen, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, J. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and defendants have appealed. The plaintiff, as executrix of the estate of John McClure, deceased, entered into a written contract with the defendants, whereby plaintiff sold and the defendants bought 400 tons of grapes at the agreed price of $15 per ton, delivered and packed on board the cars. About 79 tons of grapes had been delivered and accepted, when the rain damaged those remaining in the vineyard. Thereupon John Q. McClure, the manager of the estate, who had full authority in the matter, had a conversation with Robert Alberti, one of the appellants, the result of which was an abandonment of the contract by mutual consent of the parties. An oral agreement was entered into, to the effect that appellants would select various portions of the vineyard from which sufficient grapes might be picked to fill the boxes of the appellants then on the place. This arrangement was carried out, appellants made their selection, and 25 tons of grapes were delivered by respondent to appellants at the railroad station.

Appellants never made any further demand on respondent for grapes. The respondent delivered to appellants, in all, 104.17 tons of grapes at the agreed purchase price of $15 a ton, making the total price of $1,562.55. Appellants paid on account all but the sum of $365.74. Respondent made demand for the payment of this amount, and the appellants sought to surcharge the account with the value of a large number of boxes claimed by the appellants to have been delivered to the respondent and lost by her. The parties were unable to reach a settlement, whereupon respondent commenced this action to collect the balance due for the grapes delivered. The appellants answered, and thereafter filed a cross-complaint, alleging damages for the failure of respondent to deliver the balance of the grapes specified in the written agreement, placing their loss of profits at $1,479.15, and alleging an additional loss of $46.80 for boxes lost or destroyed by the respondent. The respondent answered the cross-complaint, denying its allegations, and as special defenses to the claim for damages for the alleged nondelivery of grapes asserted an alteration of the contract, that further performance had been prevented by the appellants, and that other grapes were available in the open market, equally accessible and at an equal or less price than that agreed to be paid by the terms of the contract.

---

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

The trial court found that the agreement was in fact abandoned. It, in effect, upheld all of the special defenses of the respondent, and found that respondent had suffered a few boxes belonging to the appellants to be lost or destroyed, amounting in value to $4.20. After crediting this amount, it rendered judgment in favor of respondent and against the appellants for $361.54, together with costs of suit, and adjudged that appellants take nothing by reason of their cross-complaint. From this judgment the appeal is taken.

[1] The evidence fully sustains the finding of the trial court that the written agreement for the sale and purchase of the grapes was mutually abandoned by the parties, and that each of them was thereby released from any further obligation by reason of its terms; the new oral agreement abrogating the former contract. This finding we think is correct. The oral agreement, found by the court, was not a modification or alteration of the written agreement, but was a new agreement superseding that then existing. The idea conveyed by the evidence and the finding is that the written agreement was abrogated. Pearsall v. Henry, 153 Cal. 314–325, 95 Pac. 154, 159. The record shows at the time John Q. McClure, on behalf of the respondent, and Robert Alberti, acting for the appellants, were considering the damage caused to the grapes by the rain, and the new oral agreement was entered into, Alberti said: "That concludes our proposition for this year." McClure told Alberti "to go ahead and fill up the balance of his boxes and send them down, and then we would quit. He [Alberti] was the one that said, 'Then we will quit,' and I [McClure] agreed with him. He said, 'Fill up the balance of the boxes; that will conclude the proposition,' or something—'our proposition,' or 'deal for this year.'"

The claim of the respondent and the finding of the court that the written agreement was abandoned is further borne out by the fact that appellants made no demand on the respondent for further deliveries during the grape season of that year. Aside from the damage done to respondent's grapes by the rain, which is the reason assigned by appellants for the abandonment of the contract, there is the further significant fact, found by the court from the evidence in the record, that appellants were able to purchase in the open market the same kind of grapes as those bought from the respondent at a lower price per ton. An easy computation discloses that the grapes received by the appellants under the original contract have been fully paid for. The present action is, in effect, one in assumpsit for the agreed value of the grapes delivered under the oral agreement. Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, 258, 23 Pac. 127. The evidence fully supports the findings of the trial court, which in turn uphold the judgment.

[2] After the evidence was closed, but before decision, the trial court permitted the respondent to amend her third amended complaint and her amended answer to the second amended cross-complaint of the appellants, by setting up the mutual abandonment of the written agreement by the parties—the allegation theretofore having been merely that the parties "entered into an oral agreement in alteration of said written agreement." Appellants sought to demur and to answer to respondent's pleadings as amended, claiming that a new cause of action and a new defense were set up. The demurrers and the answer were struck from the files. Appellants were not prejudiced by this action. As we read the record, the amendment, in effect, was merely one to conform to the proofs. Assuming that an additional issue was tendered by the amendment, we cannot see how the testimony in the case could have been different from that already introduced. All the facts were before the court, and its findings conclusively establish the liability of the appellants, irrespective of whether the issue was one of an alteration of the written contract or its entire abandonment, and the substitution of the oral agreement.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; MYERS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.

---

190 Cal. 345

HAYES v. BREEDEN et al. (S. F. 10211.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 23, 1923.)

1. Deeds ⟸208(5)—Finding of delivery of trust deed with intention to pass title held warranted.

A grantor's direction to the attorney drawing a trust deed in the presence of the grantees to keep the deed for the grantees, and a certificate subsequently executed by him reciting the making of such deed and showing an intention that it should be effective, in connection with other testimony, held to justify a finding of delivery with intention to vest title.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1073(1)—Judgment in suit to quiet title not reversed because ignoring trust, where appellant had no interest in that question.

In action to quiet title against persons claiming as trustees, judgment for defendants will not be reversed because decreeing that defendants owned the land in fee and ignoring the trust, where plaintiff was not a beneficiary and had no interest in the trust.

---

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Viola Hayes, as administratrix of Laura J. Craycroft, deceased, against H. O. Breeden and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Everts, Ewing & Wild and J. R. Fitch, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Strother P. Walton and Ray C. Wakefield, both of Fresno, for respondents.

WILBUR, C. J. This is an action by the administratrix of the estate of Laura J. Craycroft, deceased, to quiet title against the defendants, who claim under a lost and unrecorded deed by the deceased to the defendants. The court rendered judgment for the defendants, and the plaintiff appeals.

[1] The question raised on appeal is whether or not this deed was delivered. The deed reserved the income of the property to the grantor for life and provided that upon her death the property should be sold by the defendants and the proceeds distributed to certain charitable and religious institutions and to certain private beneficiaries. The deed was prepared by M. K. Harris, an attorney at law, at the instance of the deceased; was executed and acknowledged June 11, 1917, in the presence of the grantees, whereupon the deceased said to M. K. Harris, in their presence, "Judge Harris, you keep the deed for the trustees and put it in your safe," to which Judge Harris replied, "All right." Thereafter, on February 13, 1918, the decedent signed a certificate promising to pay $10,000 to the Men and Millions Movement. This certificate contains the following statement:

"This certifies that I have provided in a deed of trust under H. O. Breeden and W. W. Congdon, as trustees, that at my death $5,000 is to be paid to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions at Indianapolis and $5,000 to be paid to the Board of Church Extension of Kansas City. It is my desire that the provision of $10,000 as assigned above and in the deed of trust be counted as a part of the fund of $6,300,000 under the Men and Millions Movement of the Christian Church."

The direction of the grantor to keep the deed for the grantees, made in their presence, with the subsequent declaration contained in the certificate showing the grantor's intention that the deed should be effective in connection with other testimony which need not be set forth in detail, was amply sufficient to justify the finding of the trial court that the deed was delivered with the intention of vesting title.

[2] But one other point need be noted. The defendants were trustees and were required under the terms of the deed to dispose of the property and to distribute the proceeds to the beneficiaries therein named. The court decreed that the defendants owned the land in fee. Appellant claims that this decree ignored the trust features of the deed. As the plaintiff is not a beneficiary under the trust deed and has no interest in that question, the judgment will not be reversed for that reason. The beneficiaries of the trust will, of course, be entitled to enforce that trust as against the defendants who hold the legal title.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, J.; MYERS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.

---

190 Cal. 343

In re DORN'S ESTATE. (S. F. 10075.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1923.)

1. Wills ⇐423—Decision of contest before probate is conclusive only as to right to admit to probate.

The decision of a will contest before the will is admitted to probate is conclusive only as to the question therein determined, which is the right to admit the will to probate.

2. Wills ⇐423—Will admitted after contest may be contested by another heir.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1327, 1333, giving a right to contest a will within one year after it is admitted to probate, a will which had been admitted to probate after contest by one heir may be thereafter contested by other heirs.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; E. C. Robinson, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Gustavus W. Dorn, deceased. Proceeding by Johanna F. Ahlborn and others against Sadie P. Dorn, as executrix and as sole devisee, to contest the will. From an order dismissing the petition for revocation of probate, contestants appeal. Reversed.

Wm. H. Chapman, Edwin L. Forster and Franklin T. Poore, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Welles Whitmore, of Oakland, for respondent.

MYERS, J. In this case a will had been offered for probate, and a contest thereto before probate, had been filed by two children of the testator, alleging various grounds of contest. This contest was tried, resulted adversely to the contestants, and the will was thereupon admitted to probate. Within a year thereafter another child of the testator filed a petition for revocation of the probate, upon substantially the same grounds which had been alleged in the contest before probate. The trial court dismissed this petition on motion, on the ground that the judgment in the contest before probate, being a proceeding in rem, was conclusive upon all persons interested in the estate, whether they participated in that contest or not.

[1] Respondents rely upon the authority of Estate of Allen, 176 Cal. 632, 169 Pac. 364, but that case is not in point here. In that case a contest had been filed before probate by one of the heirs, and determined adversely to the contestant. The trial court was about to enter a judgment upon the verdict admitting the will to probate when a second contest was filed by another heir, alleging the same grounds. The trial court dismissed the second contest, upon motion, upon the ground that all of the heirs were concluded by the contest already determined. This court affirmed that order, saying:

"The probate of a will is a proceeding in rem, binding on all persons interested in the will who, being constructively notified to appear at the probate, might have come in, and who, had they come in, would have been heard for or against the will."

What is there said must be read in the light of the questions then before the court. The proceeding there referred to was a proceeding for the admission of the will to probate. The notice there referred to was, in effect, a notice to the heirs to appear and show cause why the will should not be admitted to probate. The judgment admitting the will to probate would have been equally binding upon all persons interested in the estate if no contest had been filed. But it is binding, in either case, only with respect to the question involved in that proceeding, which is the question of the admission of the will to probate.

The effect of that decision is merely this: That where a contest is filed at the time of the hearing of an application for probate of a will, and is determined adversely to the contestant, other heirs cannot then come in and file a new contest before probate and have a hearing thereon; they have had their day in court, an opportunity to join forces with the original contestant, or to file other grounds of contest; the time fixed in the notice for the filing of contests had expired; and they are concluded by the decision already made. But they are concluded only as to the question there pending, which is the question of the admission of the will to probate.

[2] But the admission of a will to probate is not a final adjudication of the validity thereof. Our statute expressly provides that "When a will has been admitted to probate, any person interested may, at any time within one year after such probate, contest the same or the validity of the will" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327), and, "If no person, within one year after the probate of a will, contest the same or the validity thereof, the probate of the will is conclusive; saving to infants and persons of unsound mind, a like period of one year after their respective disabilities are removed" (Id., § 1333). The right to contest a will after its admission to probate is thus expressly reserved to all the heirs. To uphold the soundness of respondent's position would be to hold that the provisions above quoted and all the remaining provisions of that article of the Code are wholly inoperative, because the probate of a will is as binding in the absence of a contest as it is when a contest has been filed and tried.

It may well be that an heir who has actually contested the will before probate is thereby estopped to contest it again after probate, but that is not the situation here involved. Certain it is that one who has not done so is accorded that right for the period of one year after probate.

The order dismissing the petition for revocation of probate is reversed.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; WASTE, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 112

KOHN v. NATIONAL FILM CORPORATION OF AMERICA. (Civ. 3967.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1. California. Dec. 11, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 8, 1923.)

1. Trial ⊜143—Verdict not directed when there is substantial conflict, but scintilla of evidence does not create substantial conflict.

Motion for directed verdict is governed by the same rule as motion for nonsuit, and should not be granted when there is a conflict in the evidence of a substantial kind, but a bare conflict created by a "scintilla" of evidence is not substantial within this rule.

2. Trial ⊜170—Motion for directed verdict may be made by party having burden when case uncontroverted.

A motion for a directed verdict may be made by plaintiff where on the whole evidence the cause of action alleged is supported, and no support is given the defense alleged, or by defendant, though having the burden, whenever a complete defense has been made out by uncontradicted evidence.

3. Compromise and settlement ⊜24—Evidence held insufficient to create conflict so as to make question for jury.

In action for breach of contract to manufacture films, evidence held to show without conflict that, when plaintiff accepted negatives which he had theretofore refused, and returned other negatives not covered by the contract in satisfaction of defendant's claim for payment of expenses of production, it was intended to settle all matters of difference between the parties, and hence a verdict for defendant was properly directed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action by Marion H. Kohn against the National Film Corporation of America. From a judgment on a directed verdict for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. D. Lederman, of San Francisco, and Loeb, Walker & Loeb, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Janeway, Beach & Pratt and Frank M. Gunter, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. Plaintiff commenced this action to recover a large amount of damages—a sum in excess of $100,000—which he alleged he had suffered by reason of breach of contract committed by the defendant. The contract was set out in full in the complaint. The defendant's answer denied the material allegations as to plaintiff having been damaged, and especially alleged that the entire controversy had, on a date prior to the commencement of the action, been settled by agreement between the parties. At the conclusion of all the evidence the trial judge directed the jury to bring in a verdict in favor of the defendant, which verdict was returned, and judgment entered accordingly. From that judgment plaintiff has appealed.

The defendant corporation was engaged in the business of manufacturing films for exhibition purposes. The plaintiff dealt in films as a producer. The contract between defendant and plaintiff was made on the 12th of January, 1920, and required the defendant to manufacture 26 one-reel comedies featuring "Smiling Bill Jones" and 26 one-reel comedies featuring "Polly Moran." The contract provided that the films should be "first class, salable, standard comedies," and that each comedy should be a "finished product." The latter requirement was further defined as follows:

"It is understood and agreed that the term 'finished product' means a positive film properly cut, titled and assembled and the negative cut in accordance therewith."

The defendant, as the contract terms stated, was required to "deliver one negative and one positive print of each picture, together with a continuity sheet of same, a synopsis, two dozen still photographs and one dozen plates for each production made under this contract." The first delivery was to be made on the 1st day of March, 1920, and succeeding deliveries each week thereafter, the Jones pictures and Moran pictures to be delivered in alternate weeks. On his part plaintiff agreed to pay not to exceed $2,250 for each comedy. It was further provided that a statement of the actual cost of each picture was to be furnished to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff should sell the pictures and after deducting publicity and sale expenses should return to the defendant 40 per cent. of the remaining profits. This contract was modified early in March so as to provide that as to the Moran pictures there should be manufactured 26 two-reel instead of 26 one-reel comedies. Under the modification plaintiff was required to advance the sum of $6,000 toward the production of each of the two-reel comedies. By May, 1920, several comedy films had been manufactured under the contract, and various payments on account of advanced cost had been made by the plaintiff to the defendant. Plaintiff had received several positive prints of these films, and had endeavored to dispose of them on the market. His evidence, as furnished by himself and several witnesses engaged in the trade, was that the films were faulty in several particulars, which were enumerated, and that they were not salable. Prior to the meeting of June 12th, which is referred to hereinafter, he had notified the defendant that the films were not salable and that he would not accept them and that defendant should not proceed to manufacture any more. At that time he was in arrears on advanced production cost required to be paid under the terms of the contract in an amount of about $9,000. Defendant was demanding that he pay this money. Plaintiff advised the defendant that he was having trouble securing money because of the poor quality of the films. As a result of the insistent demand made by the defendant that he pay to it the money claimed, a meeting was arranged, which meeting was held on June 12, 1920, at the office of the defendant in Hollywood. The meeting was attended by plaintiff and an associate named Chatkin, and on the part of the defendant by some of its officers. The discussion lasted for several hours and, as the witnesses seemed to agree, it took the form of a heated controversy during a great deal of that time. The outcome of it all was that the defendant agreed to accept in settlement of the expense account, which, upon being then checked up, was found to be somewhat in excess of $9,000, the negative films of three pictures, which it had previously, under a different contract, manufactured for plaintiff, and sell those pictures, returning to plaintiff any excess received over the amount of the indebtedness. Plaintiff accepted the seven Jones negatives and three of the Morans, and gave his receipt therefor, which receipt expressed no reservation. The receipt of these negatives occurred several days after the meeting of June 12th, and immediately after the three negatives last before referred to were delivered to defendant.

Up to this point there is absolutely no controversy between the parties as to the facts. The main question argued by appellant is that it was not shown clear of conflict in the evidence that, through the arrangement made at the meeting of June the 12th, and the receipt of the Jones and Moran negatives by plaintiff several days later, a final adjustment was made of all accounts, including any claims for damages which plaintiff might have had as attributable to the defective quality of the films which were manufactured. It should be remembered that there is no controversy but that plaintiff had previously notified the defendant that he would not accept the pictures, the negatives of which were later receipted for by him as stated, nor is there any controversy but that further production of pictures under the contract was mutually abandoned at that time. And notwithstanding this latter indisputable fact, the plaintiff here included in his complaint not only claim for damages arising because of the defects in the films manufactured, but also for profits which he might have made upon the full number agreed to be produced. Before proceeding, as we will next do, to analyze briefly the evidence as to what occurred at the meeting of June 12th, it may be well to recapitulate the condition of the controversy as it stood without suggestion of any dispute: Defendant had manufactured a portion of the films agreed to be furnished under its contract, and had possession of the most material part of the merchandise, to wit, the negatives; plaintiff, after having viewed, examined, and attempted to market copies or prints from those negatives, notified the defendant that he would refuse to accept the films, and that the defendant should not proceed further in the execution of its contract. The defendant demanded that it be paid money which the plaintiff had agreed to pay on account of production costs, and the plaintiff insisted that the quality of the films was not such as the contract required the defendant to manufacture, and, still insisting upon his refusal to accept the same, entered into a conference with the defendant. In addition to the circumstances shown, the defendant at the trial produced witnesses who were present at that conference who gave testimony amply supporting the defense that, as a result of that meeting, it was expressly agreed that defendant, in lieu of money would accept from the plaintiff three negatives of a "Cunard" picture, and that the plaintiff took from the hands of the defendant the three Moran and seven Jones negatives (which he had theretofore declined to accept), and that the entire transaction was thus agreed to be adjusted and closed. That such was the condition brought about through the arrangement made at that time the trial judge held was shown without material dispute in the evidence.

[1, 2] The situation of a case which will authorize a trial judge to direct that a verdict be returned for the plaintiff or defendant has been defined many times in decisions of the Supreme Court of this and other states, for the rule is practically the same throughout the country. Briefly stated, such a direction is not authorized where there is a conflict in the evidence of a substantial kind. A bare conflict, created by what is sometimes termed a "scintilla" of evidence, is not substantial within the interpretation of the decisions. The rule is precisely the same as that applied where a motion for judgment of nonsuit is under consideration. On such a motion it must appear that the evidence utterly fails as to essentials necessary to be proved before an order granting the same will be allowed to stand. In Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 123 Pac. 267, the rule is declared in accordance with the announcement made in many earlier cases which are there cited, and we may add a reference to subsequent decisions: Estate of Casper, 172 Cal. 147, 155 Pac. 631; Jacobson v. Northwestern Pac. R. R. Co., 175 Cal. 468, 166 Pac. 3; Diamond v. Weyerhaeuser, 178 Cal. 540, 174 Pac. 38; Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 177 Pac. 283; Finkle v. Tait (Cal. App.) 203 Pac. 1031. The motion for a directed verdict may be made either by the plaintiff, where, upon the whole evidence, the cause of action alleged in the complaint is supported, and no support is given to the defense alleged by defendant, or it may be made by the defendant, whenever a complete defense has been made out by uncontradicted evidence. The latter statement is called forth because of the insistence of appellant's counsel that the motion for a directed verdict is never proper as coming from a party who has the burden of proof, and, applying his statement to this case, he argues that because the defense of payment was affirmative on the part of the defendant, a verdict could not be directed by the court under any state of the evidence. This position is illogical. To illustrate: Let us suppose that, after plaintiff had introduced testimony sufficient to establish a prima facie case, the defendant had proposed to prove payment of the obligation; assume that the plaintiff, in order to obviate the necessity of such proof of payment to be made, stipulated in lieu thereof that payment had been made as alleged by the defendant. In that state of the case, but one verdict would be legally possible, to wit, a verdict for the defendant.

[3] Looking now to the evidence, which appellant insists was of substance as furnishing a conflict on the proposition: The plaintiff testified that he did not agree that his claim for damages became settled by the arrangement made at the meeting; that the Jones and Moran pictures were not specially considered. He testified that the "reason" why he accepted the negatives was that he feared bankruptcy or an attachment against the property of defendant. A man named Brandt occupied the position of being a professed friend to both sides. He was produced as a witness for the plaintiff, and testified first on the question as to damages, giving his experience in attempting to make a sale of the film prints. He admitted that he assisted in bringing the parties together at the meeting of June 12th. Plaintiff called him in rebuttal in the attempt to disprove the case that had been made under the defendant's plea of an accord and satisfaction. This witness admitted that the quality of the films was discussed, and that plaintiff at first refused to make any settlement of the $9,000 bill. He was asked the question among others:

"Now, Mr. Brandt, was there in substance and effect anything said by anybody at that meeting that Marion Kohn would take back the 'Smiling' Bill Jones picture and the Polly Moran pictures, and that he would settle his claim in full against the National Film Company by that arrangement? A. Well, now, I cannot recall the entire incident. After the matter of the $9,000 was settled, it practically was agreed, and that is all there was to it. And then there was some discussion about turning back the negatives of the Cunards—I mean of the Jones and the Morans. The Court: What was said about that? A. Well, there was a lot of talk at that meeting. It is quite difficult to recall it. If I had thought it was coming up, I would probably have made a mental note of it. But, as far as I remember it, the whole thing was based on the settlement of $9,000. The Jones and Moran matter was not really an issue. It was the settlement of the $9,000 in cash that Captain Rubey wanted, and I don't recall whether they decided to give them the negatives, or whether they stayed with the National, on the Jones and Moran. Q. By Mr. Lederman: Well, Mr. Brandt, did you yourself make the proposition that Mr. Kohn should take the 'Smiling' Bill Jones and the Polly Moran pictures, and that he should go out and sell those and end up everybody's claim? A. I did; I made a lot of propositions, including that one. I said the best way to settle the whole matter—they seemed to be at loggerheads about the whole proposition—I said, 'The best thing to do is to turn back the two Cunards to the National, and Mr. Kohn take the Moran and the Jones and try to sell them and try to get out of his'— Q. Did he agree to that, Mr. Kohn? A. There was not any agreement on it. They busted up in a row. I think Captain Rubey left the room about that time. * * * Q. Well, will you add anything else, Mr. Brandt? Will you please state anything else you can recollect that happened at that meeting, any statements made by anybody? A. I cannot recall any specific statements made at the meeting. There was an attempt to get a settlement, particularly of the $9,000; that was the thing Mr. Kohn was asked to come down there for. The whole matter was touched on at several times, with regard to an entire settlement of the whole thing. The Court: Was anything said at that time about the fact that Mr. Kohn had already said he would not take any more of the Moran and the Jones pictures? A. That was practically all wound up at that time. They had all decided there was not going to be any more producing. The Court: What do you mean? A. Well, there would not be any more Jones produced and there would not be any more Morans produced."

Plaintiff's associate, Chatkin, in the course of his testimony on behalf of the plaintiff in rebuttal, was asked the following question, to which he replied in the terms stated:

"The Court: In that connection, what was said about the rest of the pictures under the contract? A. Well, the Jones and the Moran pictures were discussed, as to their quality, as to the amount of money Captain Rubey claimed, the amount of money they had spent over the cost of production on those pictures, and Mr. Kohn kept insisting he was not interested in that particular phase of it; all that he wanted was pictures that could be sold, and now he was up against a loss of all of it; and there was really nothing discussed about Polly Moran and Smiling Bill Jones outside of that."

We are of the opinion that the conflict contended for was one of words only. Creighton v. Gregory, 142 Cal. 34, 75 Pac. 569. Under the undisputed conditions which surrounded the parties at the time, the conclusion seems irresistible that the intent was, by the acceptance by the defendant of the "Cunard" negatives and the acceptance by the plaintiff of the negatives which he had theretofore refused to receive, and the putting an end to further prosecution of any work under the contract, to finally settle all matters of difference between the parties. Had the jury been allowed to determine the issue, and had it returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, we think it would have been the imperative duty of the court to set it aside and order a new trial. Under such a state of the case the direction as given to the jury, requiring a verdict for the defendant, was justified.

Other answering contentions made by respondent need not be given any special consideration, for the reason that the conclusion expressed herein on the main proposition concerned in this case will not permit of a new trial being had in the action.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

60 Cal. App. 53

LOS ANGELES INV. CO. v. WILSON et al.
(Civ. 3968.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 4, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 1, 1923.)

1. Vendor and purchaser ⊂⊃186—Pendency of premature action to enforce forfeiture held not to excuse purchaser for failing to make payments under contract.

Where vendor under an installment contract for the sale of realty prematurely gave notice of default and sued to forfeit the purchaser's rights under the contract, the premature notice of default and pendency of the action brought thereunder did not constitute a valid excuse whereby the purchaser was entitled to retain possession of the property without making further payments until after the final determination of the litigation.

2. Tender ⊂⊃28—Finding that, if purchaser had made tender of installments due under land contract, they would not have been accepted, not sustained.

In a suit by a vendor of realty under an installment contract to enforce forfeiture after default, evidence held insufficient to show that, even if the purchaser had made tender of installments due, it would not have been accepted.

3. Vendor and purchaser ⊂⊃95(2), 101—Notice of default and demand of payment held unnecessary where vendor in possession after default.

Where a vendor under an installment contract for the sale of realty was in possession after default by the vendee, it was not necessary to serve notice and demand of payment upon the purchaser, and the vendor might have held possession lawfully without any affirmative action, and an unnecessary notice did not constitute a waiver of default unless accepted.

4. Vendor and purchaser ⊂⊃350—Conveyance by vendor to third person held not presumptively injurious to purchaser under unmatured right to deed.

In absence of pleading and proof that the rights of a purchaser under an installment contract have not been reserved by the vendor in making a sale or conveyance to a third person, the fact that such contract or deed has been made is not presumed to be adverse or injurious to the purchaser whose right to a deed has not yet matured.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action to quiet title by the Los Angeles Investment Company against Jennie B. Wilson and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Flint & Mackay, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ford & Bodkin, of Los Angeles, and H. L. Watt, of Colton, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action to quiet the title of plaintiff in and to certain real property against adverse claims of the defendants. In addition to their answer, the defendants filed a cross-complaint, seeking to enforce the rights of defendant Jennie B. Wilson as purchaser of the same property from the plaintiff under a contract entered into on or about the 22d day of March, 1913.

On the 3d day of April, 1916, the plaintiff, claiming that Mrs. Wilson was in default by reason of nonpayment of installments due under the agreement, served upon her notice that it exercised its option to declare the agreement terminated and all her rights to the property forfeited, and demanded that she forthwith deliver possession of the property to said investment company. The defendants having continued in possession, notwithstanding said notice and demand, the company, on the 18th day of May, 1916, commenced an action to terminate the agreement. In that action the superior court entered judgment canceling the agreement and quieting plaintiff's title to the premises. On appeal to the Supreme Court that judgment was reversed. For a further statement of the facts showing the terms of the agreement, as well as the court's construction thereof, we refer to the decision on appeal in said former action. L. A. Investment Co. v. Wilson, 181 Cal. 616, 185 Pac. 853.

The first controversy grew out of the fact that although the contract provided for payment of a stated sum in monthly installments of $36, there was an initial payment of $300. The purchaser paid the monthly payments of $36 for about three years, during which time no contention was made that the initial payment was included in that part of the purchase price payable in monthly installments. Then, when the vendee did not make certain monthly installment payments and the vendor gave notice and commenced action as above stated, the defendants claimed that said initial payment was a payment entitled to credit on the obligation to pay at the rate of $36 per month, and that therefore they were not in default. The Supreme Court, having decided this question in favor of the defendants, held that the finding that Mrs. Wilson was in default at the commencement of that action was without support, and that the action was prematurely commenced. It was upon that ground alone that the judgment was reversed. The judgment of reversal was filed on December 1, 1919.

The present action, commenced by complaint filed on the 3d day of June, 1920, is an action to quiet title. In addition to their answer, the defendants filed a cross-complaint seeking to have it declared that they are the owners of an equity in the described real property pursuant to the terms of said contract; demanding that an accounting be made of certain rentals received by the plaintiff, and generally for relief in equity under the facts alleged. To this cross-complaint an answer was filed, raising material issues of fact. The parties are agreed concerning the amount of money actually paid by the vendee under said contract, and that the last of such payments was the sum of $30 paid on February 5, 1916. It is undisputed that, in accordance with the contract as interpreted by the Supreme Court, the payments made by the vendee were sufficient to pay the agreed sum of $36 per month to and including the month of August, 1916, together with a balance of $6 to be credited on the September installment. The former action was tried on the 19th day of January, 1917. By the court's findings, filed on the 30th day of that month, it was determined that possession should be restored to the plaintiff and the agreement be canceled unless, within 30 days from the entry of judgment therein, the defendants pay to the plaintiff a stated sum. No further payment having been made, the judgment in that action was entered on the 8th day of March, 1917. In the case at bar the superior court has construed the former judgment of the superior court as a judgment of eviction against the defendants, which, in view of the reversal, should now be treated as an unlawful eviction. On that theory the court has taken testimony concerning the rental value of the premises from March 8, 1917, to December 7, 1920 (date of the trial of this action), and has found the reasonable rental value of the premises during that period to be the total sum of $2,142, and has credited that amount on the contract. The vendee therefore is required, as a condition of restoration to all her rights under the contract, to pay only the balance remaining due after allowance of that credit.

The evidence shows that, prior to the commencement of this action, plaintiff never made any attempt to eject the defendants from the premises other than by notice and by prosecuting the former action, as before stated, and except that the plaintiff entered into possession under the circumstances hereinafter stated. Without having paid the installment of September, 1916, or any subsequent installment, defendants remained in possession and actual occupancy until January 13, 1917, which was six days before the trial of the former action. On that day the defendants removed their furniture from the dwelling house on said premises and ceased to reside there, but kept the key of the house. From that time until September 10, 1917, it is stipulated that no one was living in the premises and that the defendants had no personal property thereon. The manager of plaintiff's collection department testified (and his statement was not contradicted) that a day or two after the trial of the former action he visited the premises in question and found both the front and back doors standing open, but that neither locks nor doors were broken in any way. There is no evidence that the defendants were present there again except that in March, 1917, Mrs. Wilson took some plants out of the yard, at which time she says that the house was vacant and locked. In August, 1917, the assistant manager of the plaintiff visited and examined the premises. Thereupon the plaintiff took physical possession of the property, made some repairs, and on September 10th executed a contract of sale to one Bachman, on which he had made sundry payments to the plaintiff and continues in actual possession of the premises.

On May 11, 1920, the plaintiff gave notice to the defendants "that Jennie B. Wilson is now, and ever since the 1st day of September, 1916, has been in default in the payment of the monthly installment due on said 1st day of September, 1916, under that certain lease agreement with privilege of purchase, made and executed on or about the 22d day of March, 1913," between the plaintiff and Mrs. Wilson (with further identification of the contract and further specification of amounts of installments unpaid). The defendants were thereby further notified that—

> The company "hereby demands from you and each of you payment of all of the said installments due under said contract, as hereinabove stated, to and including the installment of thirty-six ($36.00) dollars due under said agreement on the 1st day of May, 1920, amounting to the sum of one thousand six hundred fourteen ($1,614.00) dollars, on or before the 22d day of May, 1920; and that thereafter and commencing with the service on you of this notice the said Los Angeles Investment Company, a corporation, will insist on your strict compliance with the terms and requirements of said agreement as to the payment of the said monthly installments as called for in said contract at the times therein stated," and that in case of failure of defendants to comply with said requirements, the company "will exercise the right and privilege in said agreement to treat any default in the payment of the monthly installments therein called for as a forfeiture of all your right, title and interest in and to the said contract and the real property therein described, and that the said Los Angeles Investment Company will exercise all authority, rights and privileges given to it under the terms of said agreement in case of a breach of the conditions of the said contract on the part of the said Jennie B. Wilson, the second party thereto. You are hereby further notified, that the total amount due at this date under said contract from you, to wit, the sum of one thousand six hundred fourteen ($1,614.00) dollars, must be paid on or before said 22d day of May, 1920, or you and each of you will forfeit all of your right, title and interest in and to the said agreement and the real property therein described, and that the said agreement shall thereby and upon such failure to make such payment be terminated in accordance with the terms and conditions thereof."

The defendants having made no further payment, this action was commenced on the 3d day of June, 1920, and resulted in the judgment from which the plaintiff now appeals.

According to the terms of the contract, the vendee made default thereon when she failed to pay the unpaid part of the $36 due September 1, 1916, and was further in default by failure to make the payments thereafter falling due, unless it can be maintained that such nonpayment was excused by some act of the vendor. The real question in this case is not one concerning nonpayment. It rather is a question concerning excuse for nonpayment. Down to September 1, 1916, the vendee was in rightful possession of the property. From that time until August, 1917, she was in actual possession, in the manner above stated, and this possession had not been disturbed by re-entry of the vendor. It was provided in the contract that upon failure to make any of the payments then the vendee "agrees to and hereby does relinquish all rights and interests created or conferred by or under this indenture and in all sums paid on said lease and the property above described"; and that time is of the essence of the agreement.

[1] During the period last mentioned, the vendee was in default, unless the premature notice of default and the pendency of the action brought under that notice constituted a valid excuse whereby the vendee was entitled to retain possession of the property without paying anything more on the contract until after final determination of that litigation. But we think that the assertion of such an excuse and of such rights on the part of a vendee under such a contract is wholly contrary to equity.

In Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 171 Cal. 336, 153 Pac. 236, the plaintiff brought ejectment against the defendant, who was holding possession while claiming under a contract of purchase of land from the plaintiff. The defendant having failed to pay an installment of money due under the contract, the plaintiff made demand therefor, and in such demand claimed an amount of interest which the defendant contended was excessive. Defendant called attention to the excess, but did not offer to pay the balance at that time. The plaintiff elected to terminate the contract and demanded possession of the property. Discussing these facts, and the effect thereof, the court said:

"The notice by plaintiff that it elected to terminate the agreement and to retake the property could have no force if defendants were not in default. The position assumed by the vendor was not like that of a party to an agreement who declines to perform some condition precedent to payment of the purchase price. In such case the vendees would be excused from acting until the vendor was ready to perform. But in the transaction between the Empire Investment Company and the defendants, the former had performed its part of the agreement when possession of the property had been given to Messrs. Mort and Wagy."

Referring to former appeals in another action between the same parties, relating to the same contract (Empire Investment Co. v. Mort, 169 Cal. 732, 147 Pac. 960), the court further said:

"As we said in the decision of the appeals in the other case: 'Defendants may not hold the premises and withhold the purchase price. Undoubtedly that is the rule.' Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 104, 103 Pac. 329; Champion Gold Mining Co. v. Champion Mines, 164 Cal. 205, 128 Pac. 315. * * * The contract provided for money payments at specified times. There were no precedent duties to be performed by plaintiff before defendants upon the dates indicated in the agreement should be bound to make payments.' The plaintiff's notice of forfeiture and demand for the restitution of the property were not (as was said in the opinion in Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 745, 93 Pac. 1007) 'a repudiation or abandonment of the contract or a consent to a rescission thereof, any more than was the refusal of the vendor to convey in Glock v. Howard & W. Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17, 43 L. R. A. 199, 55 Pac. 713, an abandonment or a consent to a rescission.'"

In Newell v. E. B. & A. L. Stone Co., 181 Cal. 385, 184 Pac. 659, 9 A. L. R. 993, the vendor having accepted payments after the times specified in the agreement, and having thereby waived the provision with reference to time being of the essence of the contract as to those payments, it was held that the vendor could not thereafter effectually declare a forfeiture of vendee's right to purchase and of the payments already made without notice that in the future a strict performance would be required. After having received such payments, the vendor tendered a deed conditioned upon payment of the balance of the purchase price, provided the entire balance should be paid immediately upon receipt of the notice, and the notice further declared that unless such payment be made immediately the vendee should forfeit all of his rights under the contract. Discussing the effect of this notice, the court said:

"The mere fact that the vendor may have been in error in supposing and declaring that unless immediate payment were made of the entire balance of the purchase price it could consider the rights of the vendee foreclosed does not convert the notice into a declaration that the vendor elected to rescind. On the contrary, defendant sought to stand upon the contract and to enforce its terms. * * * Plaintiff was in default when the notice was received by him. True, his prior defaults had been condoned, and he could have reinstated himself by making prompt payments of the balance due under the terms of the contract, but he could not, by merely saying nothing, gain the right to demand repayment of the installments of the purchase price previously made. He could not place defendant in default unless he at least tendered to defendant all that was due under the agreement up to the date of his offer."

In view of the decisions above noted, the only consistent conclusion in this case is that, although the investment company was in error when it claimed that the defendant was in default prior to September, 1916, and gave notice of default based upon this erroneous theory, and although the plaintiff was not entitled to maintain its former action, it did not thereby lose its right to prompt payment of the September and following installments as they became due. By the very terms of the contract, the vendee lost her right to possession of the property prior to the time of the trial and judgment in the superior court in the former action. Neither the prosecution of that action nor the notice of default precedent there to had interfered with defendants' possession of the premises when the actual default occurred.

[2] The finding of the court in this case that the plaintiff at "some time prior to August, 1917," physically took possession of the premises, is not sustained by the evidence. That act did occur in August, 1917, and was an act whereby the vendor obtained peaceable and quiet possession of the property, in the absence of the vendee, who for nearly a year had been in default, and who therefore had lost her right of possession.

But respondents say that the entry of judgment on March 8, 1917, in the former action, operated as a constructive ouster of the vendee; and it is argued that since that judgment was reversed, the vendee must be deemed to be restored to her right of possession as of the date when the judgment was entered. Assuming that the vendee had lost possession by reason of that judgment alone, and that no other default had intervened, we may concede that this argument would prevail. But we must also take into consideration the fact that the vendee did not make tender of any of the numerous payments which fell due after August, 1916, and thereby lost her right of possession before any judgment was rendered against her. Respondents claim that the vendee was excused from making any such tender because, they assert, appellant would not have accepted the money if it had been offered. On this point the court made the following finding:

"The court further finds that from April 3, 1916, to March 8, 1917, the date of the judgment of the superior court, the plaintiff was standing on its notice of forfeiture of defendants' interest (dated April 3, 1916), and would not have recognized defendants' rights under said agreement, or have restored the defendants to their rights under said agreement, except on payment by the defendants of the entire amount claimed by the plaintiff, and for which it had obtained judgment as aforesaid."

In other words, the only controversy was over the amount due. Relating to this finding, the only evidence brought to our attention, in addition to the notice and the pendency of the former action, is in the testimony of the witness Owens, who was an escrow officer of appellant, and Mr. Herbert, assistant general manager of the company. Mr. Owens testified that Mr. Herbert had stated that the contract was forfeited "by reason of the act committed prior to the filing of the first complaint"; that he never heard Mr. Herbert discuss anything that occurred after the filing of the complaint which changed his opinion; that he presumed that the company continued to consider the contract forfeited by reason of the judgment until that judgment was reversed by the Supreme Court. Mr. Herbert testified, referring to the notice given May 11, 1920:

"On behalf of the company I would have accepted the $30 due on September 1, 1916, under the ruling of the Supreme Court, not as full payment but I would have taken this and asked for more. I was only generally familiar with the answer filed by the Wilsons in the first case. I know they had claimed payment up to September, 1916. I do not remember their stating in their answer that they were willing to pay. I know nobody offered us any money. I would have accepted the $30 September 1st, as full payment. Had they offered $36 as full payment on October 1st, I might have accepted it—might have taken the matter up with the attorneys. I would not be willing to state that we would not have taken it. If the Wilsons had offered less than the court ordered paid in its findings, I do not believe we would have accepted it—we would have consulted with our attorneys. I considered the contract forfeited in every way after the court had entered its order. Any further negotiations would have been taken up with our attorneys."

The court found that the plaintiff did not at any time subsequent to the reversal of the former judgment offer to restore possession of the premises to the defendants; that a short time after the reversal of said judgment the defendants "did offer to pay the amount due on the purchase price under the terms of said agreement, less the amount of the rentals which the plaintiff might have received by the exercise of ordinary diligence for the use and occupation of said premises, during the period in which the defendants had been excluded therefrom, and on numerous occasions did endeavor to ascertain the state of their account with the plaintiff"; that the plaintiff "refused to accept any sum of money whatsoever upon account of said agreement, or to carry out the terms thereof, and at all times subsequent to December 1, 1919, has refused to credit the defendants with the rentals received by it for the use and occupation of the property, or for the reasonable rental value thereof from the date of the eviction of said defendants."

[3, 4] It is true that the notice and demand served by the plaintiff on May 11, 1920, demanding payment of the amount of installments then due, and that such payment be made on or before the 22d day of that month, did not directly offer to restore possession to the vendee, if such payment be made. But the notice and demand were not necessary. The vendee being in default, the vendor might have held possession, lawfully, without any affirmative action. Glock v. Howard etc., Co., 123 Cal. 1, at page 10, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17. The notice of May 11, 1920, was a voluntary offer, not constituting a waiver of default, unless accepted. If in response to that offer payment of the demanded sum had been made, the vendee then would have been entitled to be restored to possession. The fact that the second vendee, Bachman, was in possession, is not alone sufficient to show that the company would have been unable to restore possession to Mrs. Wilson. In the absence of pleading or proof that the rights of the vendee have not been reserved by the vendor in making a sale or conveyance to a third party, the fact that such contract or deed had been made is not presumed to be adverse or injurious to a vendee whose right to a deed had not yet matured when the third party transaction occurred. Brimmer v. Salisbury, 167 Cal. 522, 140 Pac. 30.

We are of the opinion that Mrs. Wilson has not been entitled to possession of the described real property at any time since September 1, 1916. Therefore she is not entitled to claim credit on her contract for the rental value of the premises while they have been occupied by the plaintiff; and, indeed, on the facts as they now appear, she is not entitled to enforce the contract at all.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 43

OCEAN SHORE R. CO. v. SPRING VALLEY WATER CO. (Civ. 4283.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 1, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 29, 1923.)

1. Railroads ⟸82(2)—Right of way held not abandoned.

Where the engineer of a corporation, which agreed to grant a railroad right of way, did not designate the location thereof and specify the conditions on which the grant should be made, as provided by the directors' resolution, neither the railroad nor its successor abandoned the right of way by not proceeding with the construction of the road, though the county board of supervisors, after the railroad went into the hands of a receiver, refused to renew the railroad franchise, the grant never having been completed.

2. Limitation of actions ⟸66(6)—Railroad's right of action for purchase money paid for unexecuted grant of right of way, held not barred.

Where the engineer of a company, agreeing to grant a railroad right of way across its land, failed to designate the location and specify the conditions as provided by the directors' resolution authorizing the grant, at a meeting held in November, 1905, and, by reason of the prolonged financial disturbance due to the San Francisco fire of 1906, no demand was made that the grant be executed and delivered until March, 1914, the right of the railroad's successor, in a suit begun the following September, to recover the purchase money paid by its predecessor, was not barred by the statute of limitations; the burden of proceeding in the execution of the agreement being on defendant, while there was sufficient cause for delay in making demand, if demand was essential.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Dunne, Judge.

Action by the Ocean Shore Railroad Company against the Spring Valley Water Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. S. Young, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Corbet & Selby, of San Francisco, for respondent.

ST. SURE, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $50,993, consisting of $35,000, with interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum from March 11, 1914, to date of judgment.

On the 14th day of October, 1905, the Ocean Shore Railway Company paid to the defendant the sum of $35,000 for a grant of a right of way across certain property of the defendant. The agreement between the parties is evidenced by a receipt for the purchase price, which reads as follows:

"San Francisco, October 14, 1905.

"Received from Ocean Shore Railway Company, the sum of thirty-five thousand dollars ($35,000.00) October 14, 1905, in full compensation for the right of way across and upon the east and north boundaries of Rancho Laguna de la Merced, in accordance with the arrangements made by the board of trustees of the Spring Valley Water Company, at the meeting held in the city of San Francisco, on October 12, 1905, as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| 22.50 acres at $2,000.00 per acre | $45,000 00 |
| Less amount allowed in reduction of the above charge | 10,000 00 |
| Balance | $35,000 00 |

"Spring Valley Water Company,
"By Pelham W. Ames, Secretary" and a resolution of the Spring Valley Water Company, passed by the board of directors at a meeting held November 23, 1905, as follows:

"Resolved that this corporation will grant a surface easement for a right of way sixty (60) feet wide, to the Ocean Shore Railway Company for its line of railway and solely for railway purposes, over the Lake Merced Rancho in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, and in a location near the easterly and northerly sides of said rancho, but such surface right of way shall be south of Ocean avenue, and shall be, as to exact location and details of locations and conditions on which the grant shall be made (which conditions shall be precedent, present and subsequent) subject to the directions and approval of the chief engineer of this corporation on his return before any grant is made in the premises."

Subsequently, on account of the fire of 1906, the Railway Company encountered financial difficulties and did not urge the completion of the contract at the time it was originally contemplated the road would be built.

On June 10, 1909, in reply to a letter from the water company making inquiry of the railway company regarding various transactions between the two companies, the then president of the railway company, referring to the right of way which forms the basis for this action, said:

"The other right of way can wait until we are ready to build through the easterly and northerly ends of your property."

No objection is alleged to have been made by the water company to this proposal. Subsequently the railway company went into the hands of a receiver and later was sold, together with "all real property, rights of way * * * and also the Richmond Branch of Ocean Shore Railway Company," to the Ocean Shore Railroad Company, which was incorporated October 9, 1911.

While in the hands of the receiver an attempt was made to secure a renewal of the Richmond branch franchise in connection with which it was originally contemplated to use this right of way, but this renewal was refused by the board of supervisors.

No further steps are shown to have been taken by either the plaintiff or defendant until January 2, 1914, when the president of the plaintiff company, which had succeeded to the interests of the original railway company, requested the president of the water company to mail him a "copy of the minutes of the board of trustees of the Spring Valley Water Company in reference to this transaction at their meeting held October 12, 1905."

In reply thereto the vice president and manager of the water company forwarded to the railroad company a letter under date of February 20, 1914, in which he reviewed the history of the entire transaction, referred to in the resolution of November 23, 1905, and, after setting it forth in detail, added: "These conditions have never been complied with." He also quoted from the letter of June 10, 1909, in which the railroad company had stated that this right of way could wait and added: "This refers to the proposed Richmond branch," and then recounted the history of the expiration and refusal by the board of supervisors, to grant a renewal of the franchise for this branch.

Subsequently and on March 2, 1914, the railroad company requested the water company to execute and deliver the grant, and on March 11, 1914, the water company refused the request with the assertion that the railway company had forfeited all rights in connection with the right of way.

On September 12, 1914, plaintiff sued to recover the purchase money paid by its predecessor. The action was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was given to the plaintiff as prayed. From this judgment the defendant appealed and urged as grounds for reversal that: (1) The purchased right of way was abandoned by the Ocean Shore Railway Company and by its plaintiff successor. (2) The remedy sought by plaintiff's complaint is barred by the statute of limitations.

[1] With regard to the first contention the trial court found "that the right of way acquired by Ocean Shore Railway Company on or about October 14, 1905, was never abandoned by Ocean Shore Railway Company, or its successors in interest, or by this plaintiff or at all." There is sufficient evidence to sustain this finding. The resolution of the board of directors of the water company required its own engineer to specify the conditions under which the grant should be made, and this he failed to do when requested, and there is no evidence that he ever offered to carry out the terms of the agreement. That there was no intention to abandon was shown by the letter of June 10, 1909, to which the water company acquiesced and by the fact that the new company gave in its articles of incorporation, as one of its objects, the building of the Richmond branch, and as late as 1912 provided for a bond issue for this purpose.

The refusal to renew the franchise in 1910 did not make the building of the road "impossible" as appellant contends. A subsequent board of supervisors might have taken a more liberal view than did the one in office in 1910, and it is possible that the railroad company, which at the time demand was made for the execution of the grant (March, 1914), was a going concern, might have then contemplated some transfer, or other arrangement, with the then existing railway lines in the vicinity.

Before the right of way could have been abandoned it should first have been designated by the water company's engineer as provided by the resolution of November 23, 1905. The cases cited by appellant in support of the abandonment theory relate to rights of way in which the grantors had completely performed and which had been subsequently abandoned by the grantees. Home Real Estate Co. v. Los Angeles Pacific Company, 163 Cal. 710, 126 Pac. 972, cited by appellants in support of the contention that respondent had abandoned, merely holds that where there has been an abandonment of a railroad right of way consisting of an easement only, the owner of the fee may maintain ejectment to recover possession. That is not the case here—the grant had never been completed, and therefore it is manifest that ejectment could not lie.

[2] For the second ground for appeal the appellant relies chiefly upon the case of Thomas v. Pacific Beach Co., 115 Cal. 136, 46 Pac. 899, but we are of the opinion that the instant case is materially different from this case, in that the cited case was based upon a carefully drawn contract which, among other things, provided that the grantee must make demand for the execution of the deed. As will be noted there is no such provision in the two documents which constitute the contract in the instant case. In the Thomas Case (at page 142) Mr. Justice Van Fleet, speaking for the court, says:

"Where a party's right to sue depends for its perfection solely upon the necessity of a demand by him to put his adversary in default, he cannot indefinitely and unnecessarily extend the bar of the statute by deferring such demand, but must make it within a reasonable time."

We are of the opinion that a fair interpretation of the receipt and resolution constituting the agreement in this case, coupled with the letter of June 10, 1909, placed the burden of proceeding in the execution of the agreement upon the defendant.

In Meherin v. S. F. Produce Exchange, 117 Cal. 215, 48 Pac. 1074, also cited by the appellant, the court, quoting an older case, says:

"What is to be considered a reasonable time for this purpose does not appear to be settled by a precise rule. It must depend on circumstances. If no cause for delay be shown it would seem reasonable to require the demand to be made within the time limited by the statute for bringing the action."

Under the circumstances in this case, it cannot be said that respondent was guilty of laches in making demand. Certainly the prolonged financial disturbance, due to the great fire, furnishes sufficient cause for delay in making demand if, indeed, demand was essential.

Other cases cited by the appellant, like Thomas v. Pacific Beach Co., supra, are predicated upon the necessity of demand by the grantee, which we have already stated we do not think was required in the instant case.

For the reasons stated the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: TYLER, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

---

(59 Cal. App. 762)

ALTUBE v. AGUIRRE et al.
(Civ. 4378, S. F. 10102.)

(District Court of Appeals, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 24, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court in Bank Jan. 22, 1923.)

1. Limitation of actions ⟸157(3)—Notes in payment of interest on note sued on admissible as acknowledgment importing new promise to pay.

Notes given for interest on a note sued on are admissible to overcome the bar of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 337), if they constitute payments of interest; part payment of principal or interest, unless accompanied by qualifications, being an unequivocal acknowledgment of a contract or liability, from which a new contract to pay the debt, as required by section 360, must be inferred.

2. Stipulations ⟸14(1)—Stipulation that notes were not for payment of interest on note sued on held insufficient to show such fact.

A stipulation of counsel that notes given for interest on a note sued on were "not for the payment of interest" held insufficient to show that they did not constitute payments thereof, so as not to overcome the bar of the statute.

3. Limitation of actions ⟸157(3)—Whether notes for interest on note sued on constitute payments of interest depends on intent.

Whether notes given for interest on a note sued on constituted payments of interest, so as to overcome the bar of the statute, depends on the parties' intent when they were given, which may be determined by their conduct.

4. Evidence ⟸215(1)—Notation on note held admissible as admission on issue whether notes "for interest" were intended as payments of interest.

A memorandum on the back of a note given for interest on a note sued on, showing the parties' recognition of a mortgage securing the latter note and of several notes "for interest" thereon as outstanding obligations of the maker, held admissible as an admission against interest on the issue whether the parties intended the several notes as payments of interest, though probably insufficient as an acknowledgment or promise under Code Civ. Proc. § 360.

5. Limitation of actions ⟸197(4)—Notes "for interest" held intended as payments of interest on note sued on.

Evidence held to show that notes "for interest" on a note sued on were given, accepted, and intended by the parties as payments of interest on the original indebtedness, so as to overcome the bar of the statute of limitations.

Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Hearing.

6. Limitation of actions ⟸148(3)—Note in payment of interest on mortgage held sufficient acknowledgment of indebtedness.

A note given in payment of interest on a mortgage securing a note sued on, accompanied by a letter signed by the makers stating that it was in payment of such interest, with a notation on the back referring to the mortgage, constituted a sufficient acknowledgment of the indebtedness to overcome the bar of the statute.

7. Limitation of actions ⟸142—Acknowledgment of indebtedness to distributee of note and mortgage from payee's estate made to proper party.

An acknowledgment of an indebtedness to one owning it as distributee of a note and mortgage from payee's estate was made to the proper party.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by Julius John Altube against M. J. Aguirre and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

William A. Kelley, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Frank J. Hennessy, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. The defendants have appealed from a judgment against them upon a promissory note for $2,500, which judgment also decreed a foreclosure of a mortgage given as security therefor.

The only question presented by the appeal is: Was the debt barred by the statute of limitations? Code Civ. Proc. § 337. The trial court found that it was not barred. The evidence upon which this finding was based was admitted over the objection of defendants, and such evidence is attacked upon this appeal as irrelevant and immaterial and insufficient to support the finding even though properly admitted.

The note and mortgage were executed and delivered to Bernardo Altube, the father of plaintiff, and there is no dispute about the fact that they were distributed to the plaintiff under the decree of distribution in the estate of his said father, and that he was the owner and holder thereof at the time of the trial. The note and mortgage were dated February 1, 1913. On February 1, 1915, the defendants gave to Bernardo Altube their note for $550. It was stipulated that this note was given "for interest," and the same stipulation was made in regard to a note for $183 given on February 1, 1916, to said Bernardo Altube, and also with reference to a note for $194 given to the plaintiff on February 1, 1917. These notes given "for interest" appear in the record and are signed by the defendants. Upon the back of the last-mentioned one appears the following: "Mort. $2500. Note 550. Feb. 1/15. Do. 183. Do. 1/16. do 194. do 1/17." The record also contains some letters from defendants referring to the indebtedness; but as these, admittedly, do not contain an unqualified "acknowledgment or promise" within the meaning of section 360, Code of Civil Procedure, we shall exclude them from consideration here.

[1] Appellants contend that the notes given for interest do not contain an "acknowledgment or promise" as required by section 360, Code of Civil Procedure, and therefore do not overcome the bar raised by section 337, Code of Civil Procedure. No doubt can exist upon that question in this state in view of the language used by our Supreme Court in the recent case of Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 202 Pac. 673. It is said in that case:

"In the case of a part payment, for instance, of either principal or interest, the conduct itself has always been deemed, unless accompanied by qualifications, an unequivocal acknowledgment of a subsisting contract or liability from which a new contract to pay the debt must be inferred. Barron v. Kennedy, 17 Cal. 574, 577."

[2, 3] It is clear, therefore, that the notes given for interest were properly admitted in evidence to overcome the bar of the statute of limitations, provided such notes constituted payments of interest. And this qualification leads us to the other contention of appellants, which is that these notes were not a "payment" of interest. Counsel bases this contention upon an alleged differentiation in his stipulation upon this subject. The stipulation reads: "I will stipulate the notes were given for interest not for the payment of interest." The distinction, if there be any, is too attenuated to be persuasive. However, regardless of the stipulation, the trial court found that the defendants had paid the interest by these notes. In support of that finding we have the testimony of the plaintiff that the note of February 17, 1917, was sent to him through the mail, together with a letter from defendants stating that it was a payment of interest, and that he accepted it as a payment of interest. The question of whether or not these several notes constituted payments of interest was one of intent of the parties at the respective times they were given, and that intention may be determined by the conduct of the parties. It is evident that the notes were received and accepted by the plaintiff and his predecessor in interest, and the significant fact also appears that these notes given for interest also bore interest. This fact was considered of importance in the case of Bennett v. Baird, 67 Ill. App. 422, in which it was said:

"Another assignment of error is the admission of the $206 note because it did not amount to payment, and was nothing more than a promise to pay, and therefore did not operate to bar the statute of limitations. This transaction was intended and treated by the parties as a payment, and the original note was so credited. * * * By it the creditor received an independent and distinct obligation for the payment of the interest, with interest thereon.

"Without it the interest then accrued would have borne no interest, and this circumstance alone was enough to make the note in substance and fact a new undertaking, so that holding both notes the plaintiff could enforce the original only to the extent of the principal and interest accruing after the date of the new one.

"The law will, therefore, treat the transaction as the parties treated it—as a payment."

[4, 5] It its clear from the notation on the back of the note of February 1, 1917, that the parties hereto treated the several notes as payments. In that notation in the handwriting of the defendant, M. J. Aguirre, it clearly appears that the parties recognized as outstanding obligations of the defendants at that time the mortgage of $2,500, the note for $550, dated February 1, 1915, the note for $183, dated February 1, 1916, and the note for $194, dated February 1, 1917. The recognition by the parties of these obligations indicates that they regarded the notes of February 1, 1915, 1916, and 1917 as payments of interest due upon the principal obligation. It is true that the note of February 1, 1917, upon which the memorandum just referred to appears, was a note given to the plaintiff and not to the original creditor. Appellants contend that the "acknowledgment or promise" required by section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be made to the creditor himself, and not to a third person, and that this memorandum is not admissible against the defendants. It is not necessary for us to determine here to whom the "acknowledgment or promise" must be made. Irrespective of the answer to that question, it is probable that the memorandum under consideration is insufficient as an acknowledgment or promise, and it has not been considered by us as bearing upon that point. It may be conceded that no "acknowledgment or promise" as required by section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure was proven by the plaintiff other than that implied by the payment of interest.

However, the memorandum was admissible as bearing upon the intentions of the parties in giving and accepting the several notes "for interest." The intentions of the parties are vital considerations in reaching a conclusion as to whether or not these notes were given and accepted as payments of interest. The written declaration of the defendants, showing that they considered these notes as outstanding obligations against them, is certainly an admission against interest and was competent upon the question of their intention. Considered thus, it is immaterial to whom the memorandum was addressed. We apprehend it would have had the same probative value if found in the defendants' private books or on the stubs of check books.

We think this memorandum was admissible as throwing light upon the question of whether or not the interest had been paid. It, together with the record as a whole, indicates that the notes given in 1915, 1916, and 1917 were given and accepted and intended by the parties to be payments of interest upon the original indebtedness. This warrants the finding made by the trial court upon this subject. The case then falls within the rule of law announced by our Supreme Court in the case of Minifie v. Rowley, supra, and the judgment, undoubtedly, does substantial justice between the parties.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [6] The petition for transfer to this court is denied. The note of February 1, 1917, signed by both the defendants, was forwarded to the plaintiff in a letter wherein it was stated that the note was given as payment of interest upon the mortgage for $2,500. In addition thereto, there was a memorandum upon the back of the note referring to the $2,500 mortgage. These indorsements were in the handwriting of M. J. Aguirre. This note having been given in payment of interest upon the main debt, accompanied by a letter signed by the defendants stating that it was in payment of such interest with the notation upon the back of the note, constituted a sufficient acknowledgment of the indebtedness. Minifie v. Rowley, 187 Cal. 481, 202 Pac. 673; Clunin v. First Federal Trust Co. (Cal. Sup.) 207 Pac. 1009.

[7] The acknowledgment was made to the proper party, namely, to the person who owned the indebtedness by reason of the distribution to him of the property from the estate of the original payee. Visher v. Wilbur, 5 Cal. App. 562, 90 Pac. 1065, 91 Pac. 412; Farrell v. Palmer, 36 Cal. 187.

Rehearing denied.

WILBUR, C. J., and LAWLOR, LENNON, WASTE, SEAWELL, KERRIGAN, and MYERS, JJ., concur.

60 Cal. App. 98

Ex parte TEPPER. (Cr. 889.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 7, 1922.)

1. Licenses ⟸1—Ordinance requiring license fee for each alcoholic liquor prescription held revenue measure.

An ordinance, requiring retail druggists selling certain alcoholic liquors containing more than ½ per cent. of alcohol by volume for medicinal purposes to pay a license fee for each prescription filled, held a revenue measure, not a regulatory or police enactment, though entitled "An ordinance providing for licensing and regulating the carrying on of certain professions, trades, callings and occupations."

2. Licenses ⟸7(3)—Ordinance requiring license fee for each prescription of alcoholic liquors held void as discriminatory between persons engaged in same "business."

An ordinance requiring retail druggists disposing of certain alcoholic liquors containing more than ½% of alcohol for medicinal purposes to pay a license fee for each prescription filled, in addition to a graduated license tax imposed by another ordinance on all who conduct "the business of a retail drug store" held void as violating Los Angeles charter, § 2, subd. 21, giving that city power to license businesses and callings "provided, that no discrimination in the amount of license tax shall be made between persons engaged in the same business, otherwise than by proportioning the tax on the amount of business done," which means the entire business.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Business.]

Application by B. F. Tepper for a writ of habeas corpus to secure his release from custody. Petitioner discharged.

Ray E. Nimmo and Lloyd W. Moultrie, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

W. D. McConnell, City Prosecutor; J. Friedlander, Asst. City Prosecutor; J. D. Taggart, Deputy City Prosecutor; Jess E. Stephens, City Atty.; and Chas. B. MacCoy, Deputy City Atty.; all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. Petitioner is in the custody of the chief of police of Los Angeles under a judgment convicting him of a violation of section 79 of ordinance No. 41,950 of the municipality, as amended by a later enactment. Section 11 of the ordinance, which is introductory to the sections following it, reads:

"The amount or rate of license fees to be paid to the City of Los Angeles by any person, firm, association or corporation engaged in or carrying on any profession, trade, calling, or occupation hereinafter designated is hereby fixed and established as hereinafter in this ordinance provided, and such license fee shall be paid by every person, firm, association or corporation engaged in carrying on any such profession, trade, occupation or calling in the City of Los Angeles."

Section 79 provides:

"For every person, firm or corporation conducting, managing or carrying on the business of a retail drugstore where spirituous, vinous or malt alcoholic liquors, containing more than one-half of one per cent. of alcohol by volume, are sold, distributed or given away for medicinal purposes upon a physician's prescription, fifty cents (50c) for each such prescription filled; provided nothing in this ordinance shall be deemed or construed to apply to prescriptions containing other ingredients than spirituous, vinous or malt alcoholic liquors containing more than one-half of one per cent. of alcohol by volume. The license provided for in this section shall be payable monthly, and in ascertaining the amount of license to be paid, the person, firm or corporation procuring such license shall render to the city clerk a written statement, sworn to before some officer authorized to administer oaths, showing the number of prescriptions during the month next preceding the date of such statement."

Petitioner, who was conducting a retail drug store at the time of his arrest, is suffering punishment under his conviction because of the fact that he failed both to pay the license fee and to make the statement provided for in section 79. As, however, the statement is required merely for the purpose of ascertaining the amount of the license fee, we need concern ourselves only with the part of the section denouncing a failure to pay the fee prescribed. If, as claimed by petitioner, the requirement that the license fee be paid is void, the requirement that the statement be made falls with it.

[1, 2] One of the contentions made by petitioner is that the provision in section 79 for a license fee is unjustly discriminatory. In dealing with this question it is to be noted, first, that the entire ordinance of which section 79 is a part is a revenue measure, and not in any sense a regulatory or police enactment. It is true that the title of the measure is "An ordinance providing for licensing and regulating the carrying on of certain professions, trades, callings and occupations," but the Supreme Court has said of an enactment with an identical title, "While thus described as 'regulatory,' an inspection of the ordinance discloses that it is an ordinance simply for revenue; the only attempt at regulation being the prohibition against conducting or carrying on any of the enumerated professions, trades, callings, or occupations without first procuring a license so to do." City of Los Angeles v. Lankershim, 160 Cal. 800, 118 Pac. 215. An inspection of the text of the measure now before us places it in the same category with the ordinance referred to in the language just quoted. Certainly a view of section 79 convinces that the only attempt at regulation therein contained is "the prohibition against conducting or carrying on" the business therein mentioned. There is no general language of the ordinance as a whole which carries into section 79 any further or greater "regulation." Taking the ordinance, then, as a revenue measure, pure and simple, we are brought to a mention of subdivision 21 of section 2 of the freeholders' charter of Los Angeles. It gives the municipality power to license businesses and callings, "provided, that no discrimination in the amount of license tax shall be made between persons engaged in the same business, otherwise than by proportioning the tax to the amount of business done." Can the provisions of section 79 of the ordinance be harmonized with this language of the city's organic law?

All who conduct "the business of a retail drug store" are required to pay a graduated license tax by the provisions of a section of the ordinance to which we have not yet adverted, section 155. This graduated tax, which is based upon a sliding scale proportioned strictly upon the amount of business done by different concerns, and which therefore falls within the language of subdivision 21 of section 2 of the charter, had been paid by petitioner along with the other retail druggists of the municipality. So far so good, but section 79 represents an attempt to provide an additional schedule. Not only so, but the attempt appears not to have been made upon any principle of graduation whatsoever, with the "business" itself as a basis. Subdivision 21 of section 2 of the charter, in providing for a proportioning of license tax only "to the amount of business done," plainly means that the proportion shall depend upon the activities in particular cases of the entire "business" itself, and not upon a part or fraction of general business done in the sale of a single article or commodity handled by the "business" as a whole. The subject-matter of section 79 is not a business at all, but merely a part of the business of a retail druggist. This proposition is to us self-evident. A retail druggist is plainly engaged within the main lines of his business as such when he fills physicians' prescriptions calling for the furnishing or compounding of drugs or medicines for healing or curative purposes, whether such prescriptions call for "spirituous, vinous or malt alcoholic liquors," or simply for alcohol along with other ingredients, as well as when they call for ipecac or asafœtida. If authority is necessary upon such a manifest proposition, it is to be found in Commonwealth v. Fowler, 96 Ky. 166, 28 S. W. 786, 16 Ky. Law Rep. 360, 33 L. R. A. 839; McNulty v. Toopf, 116 Ky. 202, 75 S. W. 258, 25 Ky. Law Rep. 430, and Freund, Police Power, § 223, although we are not called upon to decide the constitutional question referred to in those authorities.

Upon these considerations it seems clear to us that section 79 of the ordinance cannot stand, in the light of subdivision 21 of section 2 of the charter. Section 155 of the ordinance having provided a proper graduation under subdivision 21, the proportion thus provided is utterly destroyed if the mandate of section 79 be followed. In fact, section 79 were void if section 155 had no existence. No license tax is proportioned upon business done by a retail druggist, where he is required to pay tax of 50 cents, or any other sum, upon the filling of each single prescription composed of or containing a particular ingredient, whether it be alcohol or menthol. Under such a requirement, a particular druggist, who has more calls for the filling of prescriptions containing the ingredient so discriminated against, may be called upon to pay, when the total of such prescriptions filled by him is computed, a heavy tax, while other druggists are made to pay a slight tax, or no tax whatever, though these latter may be conducting businesses of much greater magnitude than the first, considering the entire business operated by them as compared with that operated by the first.

We are cited to various California cases upon this question by counsel on both sides of the controversy, but none of them is greatly helpful to us, because of the difference in the questions involved. We do refer, however, to City of Los Angeles v. Lankershim, 160 Cal. 800, 118 Pac. 215, as lending a general support to the conclusion which we have reached. Having arrived at that conclusion, it becomes unnecessary to discuss other points made by petitioner.

Petitioner is discharged from custody.

I concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.

CRAIG, J. (concurring). Under the freeholders' charter of Los Angeles, subdivision 21 of section 2 thereof, the power of the municipality to discriminate in the amount of license taxes between persons engaged in the same business is limited to discrimination "by proportioning the tax to the amount of business done." Respondent insists that the ordinance here under consideration divides those engaged in the retail druggist business into two classes; the first consisting of those who sell liquor upon subscription by a physician, and the second being those who do not. Assuming that this is the intent of the ordinance, and that it is a lawful classification, the levying of a definite tax upon each prescription, regardless of its value, is an unlawful discrimination between members of the first class. It cannot be said that the number of prescriptions filled is in any sense a measure of the "business done." Upon this ground I concur in the conclusion of my Associates.

---

60 Cal. App. 83

CAIRNS v. HADDOCK. (Civ. 2466.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 5, 1922.)

1. Waters and water courses ⟸157—Executed parol license for ditch creates easement.

A parol license for the construction of an irrigating ditch over the licensor's land, which is executed by the construction of the ditch by the licensee, becomes in all essentials an easement upon licensor's land continuing for such time as the use of the ditch may continue.

2. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(2) — Evidence held to sustain finding of executed parol license for ditch.

In a suit to restrain an obstruction of a ditch, evidence that plaintiff had paid defendant's predecessor the sum asked for an easement for the ditch and had received a deed conveying an easement which, through mistake, failed to describe the land occupied by the ditch, but that plaintiff had entered upon the land, constructed his ditch, and maintained it for several years, held to sustain a finding that there was an executed parol license for the right of way for the ditch as it existed.

3. Trial ⟸105(2)—Hearsay testimony received without objection cannot be ignored.

Even if evidence received without objection was hearsay, it cannot be ignored in determining the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings.

4. Waters and water courses ⟸154(1) — Easement for ditch by adverse possession held established.

Evidence that plaintiff entered on defendant's land under a deed conveying an easement for a ditch which he assumed covered the land on which he constructed the ditch, but which erroneously described other land, and that he had exercised acts of ownership over the ditch and other structures for more than five years under a claim of right of way with the knowledge of the grantor, was sufficient to justify a finding he had acquired title by adverse possession.

5. Waters and water courses ⟸154(1)—Only taxes assessed need be paid to support easement for ditch by adverse possession.

It is only the payment of taxes levied and assessed which, by Code Civ. Proc. § 325, is made a condition for acquiring title by adverse possession, so that title may be acquired in that manner to an easement for a ditch where no taxes were assessed separately against the ditch and the claimant had paid all taxes assessed upon the land to which it was appurtenant.

6. Waters and water courses ⟸154(1)—Purchaser has notice of easement under which ditch has been constructed across premises.

A purchaser of land is charged with notice of the claim of an easement by one who had openly constructed and was maintaining a ditch across the land, and, if such purchaser chose to rely upon the vendor's statement there was no easement, without inquiring of the owner of the ditch, he cannot claim to be an innocent purchaser.

7. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(2) — Deed erroneously describing easement held admissible to corroborate parol license.

In a suit to restrain obstruction of a ditch, evidence of a deed conveying a right of way to plaintiff from defendant's predecessor, but which did not describe the land occupied by the ditch, was competent, not as the source of plaintiff's title, but to show that the predecessor had received the money which plaintiff testified he paid for the right of way and had dealt with him with reference thereto, notwithstanding her denials.

8. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(2) — Claimant of ditch easement need not elect between claim by grant, executed parol license, and adverse possession.

Where the claimant of an easement for a ditch alleged that he was then, and for more than six years last past had been, the owner of and in actual possession of the ditch and the right of way, his allegation was sufficient to entitle him to show a grant, an executed parol license, and title by prescription and to prevail, if proof of any was satisfactory, and he need not be put to an election as to the source of his title.

9. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(2)— Allegation plaintiff owned "ditch" held not variance from evidence of easement.

An allegation in the complaint that plaintiff was the owner of a ditch, which was repeated in the findings, was not a variance from proof that he owned only an easement and not the fee in the land on which the ditch was constructed, since a "ditch" in such connection means simply a right of way for the passage of water, especially where the allegation was qualified by a further allegation of ownership of the right of way and site.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ditch.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action by J. J. Cairns against M. C. Haddock to restrain obstruction of an irrigation ditch. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Lewis H. Smith and Alva E. Snow, both of Fresno, for appellant.

Power & McFadzean, of Visalia, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action was to restrain defendant from obstructing a ditch which was being used by plaintiff in conducting water across defendant's land from a natural water course known as Elk Bayou to a certain tract of land owned by plaintiff. In the complaint it was alleged:

"That said plaintiff is now, and for more than six years last past has been, the owner and in the actual possession of that certain water ditch heading in and leading out of a certain natural water course situate in the county of Tulare, state of California, known as the bayou, and the weirs and gates in and across said bayou at the head of said ditch and of the right of way and site upon which said ditch, weirs, and headgates are located, which right of way and site is situate in said county and state, and is more particularly described as follows, to wit" (describing it).

The answer denied "that said plaintiff is now or at any time last past has been the owner, or in the actual possession of any water ditch heading in or leading out of any natural or other water course situate in the county of Tulare, state of California, known as the bayou, or any water course at all, or of any weir or gate in or across any bayou at the head of any ditch or of any right of way or site on which any ditch or weir or headgate is located, as described or attempted to be described in plaintiff's complaint on file herein, or otherwise or at all," and it was further denied that "plaintiff is entitled to divert any water by means of the ditch described or attempted to be described in plaintiff's complaint, or otherwise, or upon any lands of plaintiff described in said complaint for any purpose whatever."

Thus was presented the issue which was tried in the court below and found in favor of plaintiff, and the main contention herein by appellant is that the evidence fails to support said finding. The evidence is uncontradicted that respondent constructed the ditch in December, 1913, and that he used it to irrigate his land, from that time, without interruption until the 8th day of March, 1920, and he claims that he established his ownership of the right of way and the right to use said ditch for said purpose in two ways:

"First, by showing an executed parol license, or facts from which the trial court was justified in inferring the existence of an executed parol license within the rule declared in Flickinger v. Shaw, 87 Cal. 126, 25 Pac. 268, 11 L. R. A. 134, 22 Am. St. Rep. 234; and Stoner v. Zucker, 148 Cal. 516, 83 Pac. 808, 113 Am. St. Rep. 301, 7 Ann. Cas. 704; and, second, because he had also acquired title to the easement by adverse possession."

[1] As to the first consideration no doubt the rule is as stated in the Stoner Case:

"A parol license to defendant to construct an irrigating ditch over plaintiff's land, which is executed by the construction of the ditch by defendant with the expenditure of a large sum of money, becomes in all essentials an easement upon plaintiff's land, continuing for such a length of time as the use of the ditch may continue."

[2] As to this aspect of the case, though, appellant claims that the evidence is insufficient to support the theory that there was a parol license. It appears that plaintiff's property was in charge of his son, W. S. Cairns, and the land through which the ditch was constructed was occupied by H. K. Wheeler, who was farming it for his father, J. Kittridge Wheeler, who was living in Los Angeles. Said H. K. Wheeler testified that—

His father and "Clara B. Heywood had the property together. * * * Their general purpose was to get the land in condition to sell it in subdivisions. I had some negotiations with W. S. Cairns with reference to the ditch. Mr. Cairns came to the ranch and said he would like to get a ditch put through the property there so that he could divert water from the ditch that was on the property at the time, over to his property; that he understood the Wheeler ranch was to be subdivided and sold; and that he would like to get this ditch at that time, because he could not tell what trouble they might run into later on. He asked me to see what could be done about getting the right of way for the ditch and permission to get a head gate in there to divert the water. My father, J. Kittridge Wheeler, died in 1914. He came up to the ranch and said that he and Clara B. Heywood would give permission to put the ditch through the property. * * * The sum of $200 was named as the sum for which Mr. Cairns could have the right of way. * * * I know as a matter of fact that the land stood in the name of Clara B. Heywood, of record, but my father had a contract with her for a one-half interest. * * * There was no work done on the ditch until after I had told Mr. Cairns that permission could be had from Clara B. Heywood."

The testimony of W. S. Cairns was of a similar character, and he added that—

He pointed out to H. K. Wheeler "where we wanted the ditch. We pointed out the place where the ditch now is, where this bayou comes closest to the fence—closest to our land. * * * There was no limitation on the time that we should have the ditch there. That I would say pretty positively—no, there was not, there was nothing said about it from the fact, as I told you, we were promised a deed for it."

The above would be ample beyond question, but the problem is complicated somewhat by the consideration that objection was made to some of the questions calling for the communication from J. Kittridge Wheeler; but the answers were received subject to the objections, and thereafter the clerk's transcript shows the following:

"Friday, July 16, 1920. Hon. W. B. Wallace, Judge. J. J. Cairns, Plaintiff, v. M. C. Haddock et al., Defendants. In the above-entitled cause, it is ordered that the testimony of J. Kittridge Wheeler as to what his father, H. K.

Wheeler told him of a conversation had with Miss Heywood be stricken out as hearsay testimony."

It may be doubted whether this has been sufficiently authenticated as an order of the court, and it is clear that "J. Kittridge Wheeler" did not testify at all in the case; but, since it is not disputed, we assume that said testimony admitted under objection was afterward excluded by the court. Nevertheless, the record shows without any objection or motion to strike out these questions and answers in the testimony of W. S. Cairns:

"Mr. Power: Now, I had reached the point with you where I asked you if you had seen Mr. Wheeler and had any conversation with him with reference to acquiring a right of way for this ditch, and you stated you had gone over or pointed out the line where the ditch now is. Now I will ask you to state what was said and done between you and Mr. Wheeler with reference to getting the right of way for the ditch, the conversation you had, and what you did. Just go on and state in your own way. A. Well, I went to Mr. Wheeler and asked him about getting this right of way for a ditch and a line to the headgate. And I asked him at the time if he could give me the deed, and he said no, that he could not give it to me direct. 'Well,' I says, 'who can?' And then, I do not remember now, but he told me his father and Miss Heywood would be the ones that I would have to get the deeds from, and I am quite sure that he told me that Miss Heywood would be the one that I would have to get the deed from. Anyhow, after seeing and talking to Wheeler a couple of times, he promised to get the deed, and he said it would be all right. Q. What was said about what you should pay for it, if anything was said in that conversation, or what you should pay if you got the right of way? A. At that time he asked me what I thought would be the right consideration for the deed, and I told him we would give him $200 for a right of way for a ditch and headgate. Then, later he came back, and he said that would be all right, providing we would put a bridge on top of this headgate, so that they could get onto that little bit of three-cornered piece of alfalfa they had in there to get their hay in and out of that tract of land. I told him that would be all right; we would do that. Q. Then what did you do with reference to building a ditch? A. We started to work on that without any deed or more right than that."

[3] It is a fair inference from the foregoing that Wheeler communicated with his father and Miss Heywood, and they authorized him to assure Cairns that he could have the right of way upon the terms suggested and that said terms were afterward accepted by plaintiff. Even if it might be said that hearsay testimony was involved, no objection was made on that ground, and it cannot be ignored as evidence in the case. Indeed, it is fairly deducible from all the facts and circumstances that an agreement for a deed was reached, and that relying upon the faith of that agreement plaintiff paid the consideration and constructed the ditch. It is of no decisive moment herein that Miss Heywood testified that she "told Mr. Wheeler he could give him (Mr. Cairns) the right to use this until we sold the land, by putting a ditch across there, * * * that was a temporary right of way that I gave, until we sold or subdivided the land." In the first place, her testimony apparently did not carry conviction to the mind of the trial judge, and we cannot say that he acted arbitrarily in rejecting her statement that the license was to be conditional. That her memory was not trustworthy is shown by her declaration that she had entirely forgotten "ever signing any paper in connection with this, and I told Mr. Haddock that I never had signed a right of way when I sold him the land"; whereas, on the 1st of January, 1914, she had executed a deed to Mr. Cairns of an unconditional right of way, and therein she admitted the receipt of the consideration of $200, although denying upon the stand that she had received any money for the license. We may add that the execution of this deed without having inserted therein any limitation as to the right of way was regarded, no doubt, by the trial judge as persuasive evidence that she intended and prescribed no conditional limitation. It is true that said deed by reason of a mistake in the description of the right of way was ineffective to convey the title, but a reading of the record can leave no doubt that she thereby intended to grant absolutely to plaintiff what he is now claiming under an executed parol license. Other reasons for viewing with caution, if not distrust, her statement as to the character of the license have been suggested by respondent; but we see no necessity for repeating them. Moreover, if it be assumed that she thus instructed Mr. Wheeler, there is no evidence whatever that it was so communicated to plaintiff. As far as the record shows, the only proposal which was submitted to respondent and upon which he acted was, as we have seen, an unconditional promise to convey the right of way. If Mr. Wheeler was remiss in failing to submit all the terms, Miss Heywood could hold her agent responsible; but she could not successfully question the rights acquired in good faith by plaintiff through reliance upon the representation of the agent.

[4, 5] Again, if it may be said that the evidence of parol license is inadequate, then the situation is such as to justify a finding that plaintiff acquired a title by "adverse possession." All the facts material to such title appear in the record. Plaintiff undoubtedly believed that by payment of the $200 he acquired the right to construct said ditch. With this understanding he entered upon the property of Miss Heywood and made the improvement at a large expense. A short time after having begun the work, he received a deed of a right of way which he understood to be of the ground upon which the ditch was constructed. Regarding said instrument as constituting what had been promised him, he exercised acts of ownership over the ditch and the structures constructed upon it for more than five years under a claim of right of way and notoriously and with the knowledge of Miss Heywood, as shown by her testimony, that he was using said ditch for the purpose of irrigation. His ownership was not questioned until March 8, 1920, although the ditch was constructed in December, 1913, and said deed was executed in January, 1914. The ditch was not separately assessed, so that the question of the payment of taxes does not arise, although plaintiff paid all the taxes assessed upon his land to which this right of way became appurtenant. No taxes being shown to have been assessed, it was not incumbent upon plaintiff to show payment thereof. Baldwin v. Temple, 101 Cal. 403, 35 Pac. 1008.

"It is only the payment of taxes levied and assessed which, by section 325 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is made a condition for acquiring title by adverse possession." Smith v. Smith, 21 Cal. App. 378, 131 Pac. 890.

It would be difficult to find a case wherein the showing of adverse possession is more satisfactory than herein.

In the cases cited by appellant we find nothing inconsistent with the foregoing. They illustrate the application of well-established principles to varying situations and are of no particular assistance herein.

[6] We can see no merit in the claim that appellant should be protected as an innocent purchaser. He acquired title to the Heywood-Wheeler property after the right of plaintiff to the easement had become vested. The ditch and its headworks were upon the land when he bought it and they were being openly used by plaintiff. Appellant was clearly charged with notice of whatever rights Mr. Cairns had, and if he chose to rely upon the statement of Miss Heywood and to make no inquiry of plaintiff, he must abide the consequences.

[7] We are satisfied the court committed no error in admitting said deed in evidence. As stated by respondent, it was not offered "as a muniment of title because the description in it was erroneous, but it was offered to show that Miss Heywood, who did not know Mr. Cairns and never had any business with him except with reference to this right of way, and who denied even receiving any money from him, acknowledged receiving from him the sum of $200, at or about the time he states he paid that sum for the right of way described in the complaint. * * * It was also competent for the purpose of showing when Mr. Cairns commenced to assert title to the easement." Thinking as he did that it conveyed the right of way in question, it would necessarily follow that when the deed was delivered he would begin to claim and assert ownership therein. The deed was offered and received in evidence for the limited purpose thus suggested and was no doubt so considered by the court.

In Pierson v. McCahill, 21 Cal. 123, cited by appellant, parol evidence was received, over objection, to show that a certain provision was omitted from a written agreement. The ruling was held to be erroneous because the mistake was not averred in the answer and that the effect of the parol testimony was to vary the terms of a written instrument. The Supreme Court said:

"Until reformed, the instrument must stand as the contract of the parties, and it was error to allow the defendant to prove a different contract, or to give evidence of an intention different from that actually expressed."

Manifestly, we have no such instance before us.

The case of Van Slyke v. Broadway Ins. Co., 115 Cal. 644, 47 Pac. 689, also cited by appellant, is no nearer the mark. Therein it was held that parol evidence was inadmissible to aid a written instrument which was entirely void for uncertainty.

[8] We understand that plaintiff was not put to an election as to the source of his title. He had alleged in his complaint, as we have seen, that he "is now, and for more than six years last past has been, the owner and in the actual possession of that certain water ditch * * * and the weirs and gates in and across said bayou at the head of said ditch, and of the right of way and site upon which said ditch, weirs, and headgates are located," etc. Under the liberal system of pleading which prevails in our practice, this general allegation of ownership was sufficient and warranted an effort to support it by showing a grant, an executed parol license, or title by prescription. Indeed, plaintiff might offer evidence of all these conditions and prevail if proof of any was satisfactory.

[9] At the oral argument it was suggested by appellant that the complaint contemplated ownership in fee of the strip of land in controversy and the findings corresponded therewith, but that the evidence at most showed only an easement, and therefore a fatal variance occurred. In this appellant is in error. It is true that said allegation and findings are that plaintiff is the owner of the ditch, but it is clear that the word "ditch" as there used means simply "a right of way for the passage of water." Smith v. Hampshire, 4 Cal. App. 8, 87 Pac. 224; Conover v. Atlantic City Sewerage Co., 70 N. J. Law, 315, 57 Atl. 897. Indeed, the expression is qualified by the following phrase and "of the right of way and site," etc., so that there can be no doubt that only an easement was found to exist in favor of plaintiff.

We feel satisfied that the decision of the lower court is just and legal, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 105

GRAY v. YARBROUGH et al. (Civ. 2543.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 9, 1922.)

Appeal and error ⟹771—Diligence in prosecuting appeal principal question governing dismissal for failure to file brief.

Diligence in prosecuting an appeal is the principal question governing the dismissal of an appeal for failure to file briefs, and where counsel filed an affidavit stating that the action involved questions of fraud, and the preparation of the briefs required a great deal of time, and that counsel had been diligent, held, that the discretion of the court should be exercised in favor of hearing the appeal.

Action by Harry J. Gray against P. L. Yarbrough and others. On motion to dismiss appeal. Motion denied.

John R. Connelly and Evan J. Hughes, both of Sacramento, for appellant.

Chas. A. Bliss, of Sacramento, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. On the 18th day of November, 1922, respondent served and filed notice of motion to dismiss the appeal herein on the ground that appellant's opening brief had not been filed. Such brief was thereafter filed December 2d, and the motion to dismiss was made and argued December 4th.

The transcript on appeal was filed September 18, 1922. October 26th, on affidavit, this court made an order granting appellant "an extension of 30 days in which to file" his opening brief, his time not having theretofore been extended by stipulation or order. Counsel for appellant presented his affidavit at the hearing of this motion to the effect that he and the attorney associated with him on the appeal believed that, by the said order, appellant's time had been extended to and including November 27th. On that day appellant secured a further order extending his time to and including December 2d within which to file his opening brief, conditioned, however, that such order should not prejudice respondent's motion to dismiss. The affidavit of appellant's counsel states that the action involves questions of fraud and that the preparation of the brief required a great deal of time, and that counsel had been diligent in the preparation thereof. In Town of Mill Valley v. Massachusetts Bonding & Ins. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 207 Pac. 253, the Supreme Court said:

"The primary subject of investigation upon a motion to dismiss for failure to file a transcript within the time prescribed by our rule, whatever the technical aspect of the case may be, is always the question whether the appeal has been diligently prosecuted. In the decision of that question the court has a very large discretion."

See, also, Borgmeyer v. Solomon, 39 Cal. App. 106, 178 Pac. 544; Friend & Terry Lumber Co. v. Devine, 44 Cal. App. 208, 186 Pac. 187; Yolo W. & P. Co. v. Edmands, 45 Cal. App. 410, 187 Pac. 755.

Under the circumstances of this case it is believed that discretion should be exercised in favor of a hearing of the appeal on its merits.

The motion to dismiss is denied.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 146

Ex parte KENDRICK. (Cr. 1100.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 14, 1922.)

1. Parent and child ⟹17(1)—Financial inability is "lawful excuse" for failure to support child.

Financial inability is "lawful excuse" for failure to support child under Pen. Code, § 270, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1723, making such failure "without lawful excuse" punishable.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, Second Series, Lawful Excuse.]

2. Parent and child ⟹17(1)—Support by other parent lawful excuse for failure to support child; "other persons."

Within the meaning of Pen. Code, § 270, amended by St. 1921, p. 1723, providing that "a parent * * * who willfully omits, without lawful excuse," to care "for his child is punishable, * * * and it shall be no defense that such child has been provided for by other persons," support by the other parent is "lawful excuse," since the statute is applicable to "parents" making both liable, and care by one parent is not care by "other persons," particularly in view of Civ. Code, § 196, making the parent entitled to the custody of a child responsible for its care and section 206, requiring both parents to maintain their children unable to maintain themselves.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Other.]

3. Parent and child ⟹17(1)—Sufficient private income of child lawful excuse for failure to support.

A sufficient private income of a child is lawful excuse for failure to support, under Pen. Code, § 270, as amended by St. 1921, p. 1723.

Application by Rodney Kendrick for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Sheriff of Alameda County. Prisoner discharged.

Henry C. McPike, of Oakland, for petitioner.

Ezra W. Decoto, Dist. Atty., and Frank Mitchell, Jr., Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Petitioner was held to answer to the superior court upon a complaint charging a violation of section 270 of the Penal Code. He instituted this proceeding in habeas corpus asking his release from custody upon the ground that the evidence heard at the preliminary examination failed to show reasonable or probable cause for believing that the petitioner had committed any public offense.

The section of the Penal Code under which the charge was laid reads:

"A parent of either a legitimate or illegitimate minor child who willfully omits, without lawful excuse, to furnish necessary food, clothing, shelter, or medical attendance for his child is punishable by imprisonment in the state prison, or in the county jail, not exceeding two years, or by fine not exceeding one thousand dollars, or by both, and it shall be no defense to such an action that such child has been provided for by other persons. The superior court, sitting as a juvenile court may exercise original jurisdiction over all such offenses."

The complaint charged that the petitioner, without lawful excuse, omitted to furnish his minor child with necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance. It was signed by petitioner's wife, who was the mother of the child.

The testimony offered by the prosecution at the preliminary hearing disclosed that the child was provided with all the necessaries of life by its mother, aided to some extent by its father; that during a portion of the period when petitioner was charged with having neglected the child it was in the custody of petitioner's mother by his arrangement and was properly and amply cared for; that on August 10, 1922, the mother of the child took it from the custody of petitioner's mother and moved with it to the home of friends, where she paid out of her own funds $60 a month to cover the board and lodging of herself and the child; that the petitioner had been a newspaper artist, but had been out of employment since August 8, 1922. It also appeared that prior to the filing of the complaint the complainant had instituted proceedings for a divorce from petitioner herein and had obtained an order from the superior court awarding her temporary alimony for the support of herself and the child.

At the hearing upon the return of this writ it was conceded that the mother of the child had sufficient funds from her private income to support the child. The case may thus rest upon the single point advanced in the argument as to the proper interpretation of section 270, Penal Code: Is one parent criminally liable for failure to support his minor child if the child is fully supported by the other parent? It may be conceded that "both a legal and moral obligation rests upon a father to support his minor children." Pac. Gold D. Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 184 Cal. 462, 466, 194 Pac. 1, 13 A. L. R. 725. But section 196 of the Civil Code provides:

"The parent entitled to the custody of a child must give him support and education suitable to his circumstances. If the support and education which the father of a legitimate child is able to give are inadequate, the mother must assist him to the extent of her ability."

Section 206 of the same Code requires both the father and the mother to maintain their children who are unable to maintain themselves.

[1] These sections are in harmony with the Penal Code section which makes it a crime for "a parent" of a minor child to willfully omit to support it. This section relates to the mother as well as to the father of a minor, and both or either are liable if the neglect is "without lawful excuse." The financial inability to do so is a lawful excuse. People v. Clarke (Cal. App.) 201 Pac. 465; People v. Forester, 29 Cal. App. 460, 155 Pac. 1022. The fact that the child was supplied by others with the necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance was a lawful excuse prior to the amendment of section 270 in 1921 (St. 1921, p. 1723), when the words "and it shall be no defense to such an action that such child has been provided for by other persons" were added. It was under the old section that People v. Clarke (Cal. App.) 201 Pac. 465, was decided, holding that the father was excused because his child was supported by its grandparents with their consent and solicitation.

[2, 3] It is argued that, by reason of the amendment, a father is not excused if his child is amply supported by its mother. But the amendment relates only to "other persons"; that is, persons other than a parent or the child itself. Thus, when a minor child is furnished with the necessary food, clothing, shelter, and medical attendance by one parent, such fact is a lawful excuse to relieve the other parent from criminal liability under the Code section. The same is true if the child has a sufficient private income.

The prisoner is discharged.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; TYLER, Presiding Justice pro tem.

60 Cal. App. 64

MacRAE v. HEATH et al. (Civ. 3857.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 5, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 5, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 1, 1923.)

1. Sales ⟸61—Whether there is sale or contract to sell depends on parties' intent, gathered from language used, read in light of surrounding circumstances if uncertain.

Whether there is a sale or an executory contract to sell depends on the parties' intent, which must be gathered from the language of their contract, read, if uncertain, in the light of the circumstances surrounding its making.

2. Sales ⟸61—Use of words "buyer buys" or "seller sells" not conclusive on issue as to sale or contract to sell.

The use of the words "the buyer buys" or "the seller sells," which, standing alone, import a present passing of title (Civ. Code, §§ 1721, 1722), is not conclusive of the question whether a contract is a sale or an executory contract to sell, as the whole instrument must be examined.

3. Sales ⟸61—Contract held one for future delivery and sale.

A contract whereby, in consideration of an advance payment to be deducted from the last deliveries, "the buyer buys and the seller sells" a crop of citrus fruit for $.03 per pound, "delivered at a packing house to be designated by the buyer" at times and in quantities directed by him, the seller to properly care for the orchards, clip the fruit carefully, and handle it so as to avoid unnecessary mechanical injury, held not a contract of sale under which title would pass immediately, throwing a subsequent loss by freezing on the buyer, but a contract for future delivery and sale.

4. Sales ⟸61—Parties held not to have practically construed contract as immediately passing title.

That the seller of a fruit crop was notified by the buyers to pick it, and that some of it was delivered and accepted after a freeze which injured a part, held not a practical construction of the contract, which contained no express warranty of quality or merchantability, which is not implied by law (Civ. Code, § 1764), as immediately passing title; the parties' conduct being equally accounted for by the belief that the contract, though executory, was still binding.

5. Sales ⟸48—Seller delivering fruit after discovering condition rendering sale unlawful cannot recover contract price.

Under Act May 3, 1915 (St. 1915, p. 328), declaring the sale of citrus fruit, 15 per cent. or more of which shows a marked drying in 20 per cent. or more of the exposed pulp, a misdemeanor, a seller delivering fruit, pursuant to an executory contract for the sale of his entire crop, after discovering that it was frosted to such extent, cannot recover the contract price, though the agreement was valid when made; Act May 24, 1917, § 11a (St. 1917, p. 912), prohibiting the sale of citrus fruit, except on trees, if "frozen to the extent of injuring the reputation of the citrus industry of the state," which is unconstitutional for the same reason as Act June 3, 1921 (St. 1921, p. 1234), and Act May 27, 1919, § 9 (St. 1919, p. 1225), only purporting to supplement and not repealing, expressly or impliedly, the Act of 1915.

6. Contracts ⟸105—No action entertained on contract expressly prohibited by law.

No action will be entertained on a contract expressly prohibited by law or on any asserted rights growing out of it.

7. Sales ⟸50—Illegal sale not validated by delivery and acceptance of goods.

That oranges frozen to such extent as to render the sale thereof illegal under Act May 3, 1915, were delivered to and received by the buyer, does not entitle the seller to recover the contract price, for an illegal contract cannot be rendered valid so as to support an action by invoking the doctrine of estoppel.

8. Sales ⟸48—Seller not bound to deliver fruit crop so damaged by frost as to render sale illegal.

Under an executory contract for the sale of an entire fruit crop, part of which was subsequently so damaged by freezing as to render the sale thereof illegal under Act May 3, 1915, the seller could lawfully deliver the fruit, if required by the buyer, to enable separation of the frozen from the unfrozen and payment for the latter, but was not bound to deliver the whole bulk as a consummation of the contract, and hence cannot recover the contract price therefor.

9. Sales ⟸152—Buyers held not liable for increased loss from delay in calling for delivery of fruit.

Where the seller of a fruit crop for delivery at times directed by the buyers, who agreed to call for delivery of certain parts by certain dates, did not demand that they take the fruit earlier than they did, which was long before they were required to do so, though, after the fruit was matured and ready for shipment, acquiesced in its being taken when it was, and delayed picking it after being directed to do so, the buyers were not liable for the increased damage from frost, though they made no serious protest at the seller's delay and the latter complied with their directions as to delivery, especially where the amount of such increased loss was not shown and the extent of the freezing could not be estimated until long afterward when the fruit passed through the separator.

10. Sales ⟸181(11)—Buyer's repudiation of contract and refusal to accept delivery held not shown.

Evidence held not to show the buyers' repudiation of an entire contract for the sale of a fruit crop or refusal to accept delivery of part, so as to entitle the seller to recover the difference between the contract price thereof and the amount for which he sold it to another.

11. Sales ⇐194—Seller held not warranted by buyers' failure to pay for fruit delivered in treating contract as abandoned and suing for lost profits on undelivered fruit.

A seller of oranges and grapefruit held not warranted by the buyer's failure to pay for the oranges which were delivered, in treating the entire contract as abandoned and suing for loss of profits on the grapefruit, which were not tendered before being sold to another, especially where the oranges were frozen to such an extent as to render the delivery thereof illegal under Act May 3, 1915.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Kenneth MacRae against J. E. Heath and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

G. P. Adams, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

L. M. Chapman, and Ward Chapman, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WOOD, Justice pro tem. On October 7, 1918, plaintiff as "seller" and defendant Heath as "buyer" executed the following contract:

"For and in consideration of an advance payment of two thousand dollars ($2,000.00), receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, the buyer buys and the seller sells the entire crop of citrus fruit, except lemons, on his several properties at Rialto, San Bernardino county, California, for three cents (3c) per pound for all varieties, delivered at a packing house to be designated by the buyer, at Rialto, California, at such times and in such quantities as buyer may direct.

"It is understood that the advance will be deducted from the last deliveries made, and that in the event such deliveries do not amount to two thousand dollars ($2,000.00), any balance due will be paid by seller on demand.

"It is also agreed that buyer will pay for each sixty thousand (60,000) pounds of fruit as soon as delivered.

"Seller agrees to take proper care of the orchards, to see that all fruit is carefully clipped, and handled in every respect with a view to avoiding unnecessary mechanical injury.

"Buyer agrees to call for the delivery of all Washington navels by May 20th, all Med. sweets Mikes by June 15, all Valencias by August 15th, and all grapefruit by October 1st."

Defendant Angeles Brokerage Company, guaranteed the faithful performance of the contract by Heath. Defendant Pann is president and holder of 90 per cent. of the stock of the brokerage company. Defendants acted together in making the contract and in all that transpired thereafter and will be spoken of herein without distinction as defendants or buyers.

About January 1, 1919, cold weather set in, and a large part of the fruit in plaintiff's orchard was frozen. Plaintiff had taken proper care of the orchards and the injury from frost was not contributed to by any negligence of his. In early March defendants directed plaintiff to pick and to deliver the fruit at a packing house agreed upon, the proprietor thereof becoming under the contract the agent of defendants for the purpose of receiving deliveries. All the oranges, except those in one orchard, the delivery of which was waived by defendants, were duly delivered. When delivered, 42 per cent. of the navels, 18 per cent. of the Mikes, 33 per cent. of the Valencias, and 62 per cent. of the Mediterranean sweets were so frozen as to be utterly worthless. There was no delay in delivery not acquiesced in by defendants. There is no complaint of lack of care in picking or handling. Three deliveries, made between March 27th and May 20th aggregating 198,270 pounds, frozen and unfrozen, were paid for at the contract rate. Defendants refused to pay for the rest of the oranges Plaintiff sold the grapefruit to third parties at its market price. This, in substance, the trial court finds, and the finding is supported by evidence. The court made other findings to which reference will be made. Judgment was rendered at the contract rate for the oranges delivered and not paid for, and for the difference between the contract price of the grapefruit and the amount for which plaintiff sold them. It was rendered against Heath and the brokerage company for the whole amount, and against Pann for 90 per cent. thereof. Defendants appeal.

(a) The first question that confronts us is: Was the contract a sale, sometimes though tautologically spoken of as a "present sale," or was it an executory contract—a contract to sell? If the former, the property in the fruit passed immediately, and the loss by freeze was upon the buyer, regardless of other considerations. If the latter, other serious questions must be examined.

[1, 2] Whether there is a sale depends upon the intent of the parties. This must be gathered from the language of their contract, read, in case of uncertainty, in the light of the circumstances surrounding its making. The use of the words "the buyer buys" or "the seller sells," which, standing alone, would import a present passing of title (Civ. Code, §§ 1721, 1722; Johnson v. Dixon Farms Co., 29 Cal. App. 54, 155 Pac. 134, 136), is not conclusive. The whole instrument must be examined.

[3] When this contract was made, most, if not all, of the fruit was not in condition in which the buyer could be called upon to accept it. The seller was to care for it until delivery. He was to clip the fruit carefully and handle it so as to avoid unnecessary mechanical injury. He might or might not do this. The buyer within broad limits was to fix the times and quantities of delivery.

There was neither immediate delivery nor payment of the purchase price. The terms were, in effect, cash on delivery. There are no provisions of the contract or circumstances surrounding its making that negative the inference from these facts that title was not intended immediately to pass. Significantly, the contract words, "the buyer buys and the seller sells the entire crop of citrus fruit," are modified by the words, "delivered at a packing house to be designated by the buyer." Under the rule in this state, clearly announced by our Supreme Court, following the Supreme Court of the United States, and in the main the English rule, and applied by this court, it is clear that this contract is not one of sale but is a contract for future delivery and sale. Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 Pac. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199; Walti v. Gaba, 160 Cal. 325, 116 Pac. 963; Algee Cotton Cases, 22 Wall. 180, 22 L. Ed. 863; Benjamin on Sales [7th Ed.] § 318 et seq.; Kenney v. Grogan, 17 Cal. App. 527, 120 Pac. 433; Pfoh v. Porter, 23 Cal. App. 59, 137 Pac. 44.

The case of Bill v. Fuller, 146 Cal. 50, 79 Pac. 592, cannot be regarded as throwing doubt upon the rule. The statement that the agreement there involved imported a present sale is little more than an observation made after the decision of the case upon another point and without consideration of Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co. or the rules there set forth. Nor does Lassing v. James, 107 Cal. 348, 357, 40 Pac. 534, militate against our view that this was an agreement to sell. There the hay sold was in stacks in the field where the buyer under his contract was to pasture his cattle and feed the hay. In effect it was delivered. Nothing further was to be done except to determine the tonnage in an agreed manner and pay for the hay at the agreed rate. The case points out, following Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., that weighing or measuring to ascertain the price is not an essential to a valid sale where the parties "agree upon a present transfer, and the thing itself is identified, whether it is separated from other things or not." In Greenbaum v. Martinez, 86 Cal. 459, 464, 25 Pac. 12, a definite number of sacks of wheat were sold at a stated price per cental. The wheat was delivered at an agreed warehouse. Nothing remained for the seller to do except to deliver weight certificates and collect the purchase price. Miller v. Hunt et al., 47 Cal. App. 768, 191 Pac. 75, upon the point here under consideration, goes no further than to quote the observation as to passing of title made in Bill v. Fuller, without adding anything in reasoning or authority that would strengthen the quotation. In Gianelli v. Globe Milling Co. (Cal. App.) 191 Pac. 720, the hay in question was stacked. Three-fourths of the purchase price was paid. There was nothing further to be done except for the seller, for a consideration apart from the purchase price, to haul the hay to one of two designated places and collect the balance due him. They were special circumstances about the transaction held to indicate an agreement for a present transfer, and the court points out that in such case actual payment or delivery is not necessary to a sale and passage of title. Nothing militating against the rule is found in Grange Co. v. Farmers Union, etc., Co., 3 Cal. App. 519, 86 Pac. 615; and little of value upon the subject is to be found in Hamilton v. Klinke, 42 Cal. App. 426, 183 Pac. 675.

[4] The fact that plaintiff was notified by defendants to pick and that there was a delivery and acceptance of some of the fruit after the freeze cannot be regarded as a practical construction of the contract by the parties as immediately passing title. Their conduct is to be equally accounted for by the belief that the contract, though executory, still obliged the plaintiff to deliver and the defendants to receive and pay for the entire crop, though injured by the elements. Except for the Act of May 3, 1915, which we shall next consider, this belief would have been well founded, for the contract contains no express warranty of the quality or merchantability of the fruit and none is implied by law. Civ. Code, § 1764; Kenney v. Grogan, 17 Cal. App. 527, 120 Pac. 433; Carpenter v. Grogan, 18 Cal. App. 505, 123 Pac. 538.

[5] (b) Since the contract did not effect an immediate sale, but was only an executory agreement to sell, what is the effect of the Act of May 3, 1915 (St. 1915, p. 328), upon the parties' transactions and their remedies? This act provides:

"Section 1. It is unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to ship, offer for shipment, sell or offer for sale citrus fruits in boxes or in bulk, if the contents of any package, or if the fruit in bulk contains fifteen per cent. or more of citrus fruits which on a transverse section through the center, shows a marked drying in twenty per cent. or more of the exposed pulp.

"Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the commissioner of horticulture and his deputies to enforce the provisions of this act and bring to the notice of the proper authorities any violation thereof. The commissioner and his deputies shall have full power to enter any place where oranges, lemons, or grapefruit are grown, picked, packed, shipped or offered for shipment, sold or offered for sale, to inspect such place or any part thereof.

"Sec. 3. Any person, firm or corporation violating any provision of this act is guilty of a misdemeanor."

Section 11a of the Act of May 24, 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 909), prohibiting the sale of citrus fruits which are "frozen to the extent of injuring the reputation of the citrus industry of the state of California, if shipped," and which is unconstitutional for the same reason that made invalid the Act of June 3, 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 1234; In re T. H. Peppers [Cal. Sup.] 209 Pac. 896), only purported to supplement and did not repeal, expressly or impliedly, the Act of May 3, 1915. The same is to be said of section 9 of the Act of May 27, 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 1221). Incidentally, it may be noted that the Act of 1917 expressly excepted from its operation the sale of frozen fruit to by-product factories and the sale of citrus fruit on trees, an exception that the Legislature did not see fit to make from the more definite prohibitions of the Act of 1915.

The Act of May 3, 1915, applies to the fruit covered by this contract. There is no room for construction to exclude sale of fruit on trees. The legislative intent is clear. The expediency of including in the act the sale of such fruit, particularly when the contract for sale is made when the fruit is perfectly sound, may be open to question. The power of the Legislature to so include it is not.

It does not appear whether when plaintiff and defendants made their agreement they had the act in mind. They are, however, conclusively presumed to have known of it. They must be deemed to have made their agreement in view of its provisions and of its possible effect upon their contract and upon their respective rights thereunder. They must be deemed to have understood that if, subsequent to their executory agreement to sell, the fruit became frosted to the extent that its sale or shipment would be illegal under the statute, then the vendor could not legally sell nor the vendee legally buy under that contract. Under their agreement only delivery can effect a transfer of the title and consummate the sale. Then, but then only, is there a "sale." Though the executory agreement be valid when made, if the fruit later becomes frosted to the extent proscribed by the act, a "sale" thereof is illegal; and therefore delivery for the purpose of effecting a sale under the contract is equally illegal. There were several deliveries, each made by plaintiff for this purpose. Each was an illegal act.

The presumption of innocence which attends people's acts until a guilty intent appears might enable the court to presume in some cases that when delivery is made there is no intent thereby to consummate the sale, but that the delivery is for the purpose of segregating the fruit to enable the parties to know what may lawfully be accepted and paid for under the contract. Here, however, the presumption cannot be indulged. The seller delivered expecting payment for all fruit, frozen and unfrozen; he demanded and collected for the first three deliveries; and he seeks here to recover the contract price for all of the balance of the delivered fruit—the frozen as well as the unfrozen.

The rule sometimes applied that ignorance, not of the law but of the fact which makes the act illegal, saves the act from its ordinary consequences cannot be invoked in plaintiff's behalf. Whatever might be said as to when the parties first definitely knew that the fruit was in a condition that rendered its sale unlawful, there can be no question that both parties knew it when the first fruit passed through the separator. The fruit, for the full contract price of which plaintiff had judgment, was all delivered later, when its condition was substantially known to all. Under such circumstances, plaintiff cannot have the aid of the court to enforce his contract. The illegality of the sale consummated by his own act, delivery of the fruit, precludes a recovery by him of the contract price. The sale is void, not because it is contrary to public morals or founded on an immoral consideration, but because the statute expressly declares it so.

[6] The law applicable is fully stated in Berka v. Woodward, 125 Cal. 119, 126, 57 Pac. 777, 779 (45 L. R. A. 420, 73 Am. St. Rep. 31), a decision cited, followed, and not questioned in later decisions of our Supreme Court, and relied upon by the courts of last resort of many other states:

"This, then, is the undoubted rule, that when a contract is expressly prohibited by law, no court of justice will entertain an action upon it, or upon any asserted rights growing out of it. And the reason is apparent, for to permit this would be for the law to aid in its own undoing. Says the Supreme Court of the United States in Bank of United States v. Owens, 2 Pet. 527: 'No court of justice can in its nature be made the handmaid of iniquity. Courts are instituted to carry into effect the laws of the country. How can they become auxiliary to the consummation of violations of law? There can be no civil right where there can be no legal remedy, and there can be no legal remedy for that which is itself illegal.' And again the same august tribunal, in Coppell v. Hall, 7 Wall. 542, says 'Whenever the illegality appears, whether the evidence comes from one side or the other, the disclosure is fatal to the case. No consent of the defendant can neutralize its effect. A stipulation in the most solemn form to waive the objection would be tainted with the vice of the original contract and void for the same reasons. Where the contamination reaches it destroys. The principle to be extracted from all the cases is that the law will not lend its support to a claim founded on its own violation.'"

[7] The fact that the frozen oranges were delivered to and received by the buyer does not entitle the seller to recover the contract price. The sale being illegal, and therefore void, it cannot be rendered valid so as to support an action by invoking the doctrine of estoppel. This is likewise completely covered by the court in Berka v. Woodward, supra:

"Nor in such case does it matter whether the contract has been partially or wholly performed, or whether the consideration has passed or not. 'The test,' says Judge Duncan in Swan v. Scott, 11 Serg. & R. 164, 'whether a demand connected with an illegal transaction is capable of being enforced at law, is whether the plaintiff requires the aid of the illegal transaction to establish his case. If the plaintiff cannot open his case without showing that he has broken the law, the court will not assist him, whatever his claim in justice may be upon the defendant.' And this must be so, for, while as a matter of private justice between individuals it would be but fair that one under such an illegal contract should restore the consideration or should make the payment, the rights of the public are superior to any such private considerations, and the public's right is that the fountains of justice shall remain unpolluted; that no court shall lend its aid to a man who grounds his action upon an immoral or illegal act. Therefore, there is no place for equitable considerations, presumptions, or estoppels. Fowler v. Scully, 72 Pa. St. 456, 13 Am. Rep. 699. Ex turpi causa non oritur actio. Whenever such a contract comes before the court the action must fail, and the parties will be left in the situation in which they may be found. Some slight attempt will be found occasionally to evade the application of this well-settled doctrine upon the ground of the hardship which sometimes results, but in no case, we think, has the existence of the rule been denied, or its justice as a matter commanding public necessity been questioned."

In Kreamer v. Earl, 91 Cal. 112, 27 Pac. 735, it is held that, although the point be not raised by either party, when the illegality of the contract appears, it is the duty of the court to refuse to enforce it. In Colby v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., 160 Cal. 633, 117 Pac. 918, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 813, Ann. Cas. 1913A, 515, the court, citing many decisions in support thereof, says:

"But the doctrine of estoppel by conduct or by laches or even ratification has no application to a contract or instrument which is void because it violates an express mandate of the law or the dictates of public policy."

As aptly stated in 23 Ruling Case Law, p. 1321:

"The objection that a contract is immoral or illegal as between the plaintiff and defendant sounds at all times very ill in the mouth of the defendant. It is not for his sake, however, that the objection is ever allowed; but it is founded on general principles of policy, which the defendant has the advantage of, contrary to the real justice as between him and the plaintiff; not for the sake of the defendant, but because the court will not lend its aid to such a plaintiff. So, if the plaintiff and defendant were to change sides, and the defendant were to bring his action against the plaintiff, the latter would then have the advantage of it; for where both are equally in fault, potior est conditio defendentis."

[8] Counsel for plaintiff say that under the contract plaintiff was bound to deliver the entire crop regardless of its condition, citing Rosenberg v. Rogers, 44 Cal. App. 196, 186 Pac. 366. That case is inapplicable. No question of illegality was there involved. If the defendants had demanded the whole bulk of the oranges as a delivery under, and a consummation of, the contract of sale, plaintiff would have been protected by the statute in refusing to so deliver them. That he could have lawfully delivered them, if required by defendants, not in expectation of receiving the contract price for the whole, but to enable the separation of the frozen from the unfrozen fruit, and payment for that the sale of which is not prohibited, there can be no doubt. Whether he himself could have separated the unfrozen fruit, and then have required defendants to accept and pay for the unfrozen part of the entire crop contracted for, is a matter of interesting speculation, but unnecessary to decide. However, this may be, hard cases do not enable us to fly in the face of established law.

[9] (c) The trial court found:

"All of the Washington navels, which comprise about one-third of all the oranges, were matured and ready or shipment at least as early as January of 1919, and might have been shipped in that month, and if they had been called for by defendants and packed during that month, the loss from damage by frost would have been insignificant; but defendants neglected to call for delivery of said fruit until the month of March, when the damage resulting from the frost had very much increased. Likewise the greater part of the remaining fruit was matured and ready for shipment at least as early as April, but defendants neglected to call for the delivery of the same until after the first of May, at which time the damage had materially increased, and the loss was much greater on account thereof than it would have been if delivered, packed and shipped earlier."

Relying upon this finding and upon the authority of Bill v. Fuller, 146 Cal. 50, 79 Pac. 592, and Miller v. Hunt, 47 Cal. App. 768, 191 Pac. 75, plaintiff urges that defendants "must stand the loss that resulted" from failure to take the fruit earlier. The findings, however, do not show what that loss is, nor does the proof. Clearly the delay found did not occasion the whole loss and thereby justify the judgment for the total contract price of the fruit. Nor is there any finding that plaintiff demanded that defendants take the fruit earlier than they did. The proof shows beyond cavil that plaintiff at least acquiesced in the fruit being taken when it was, made no protest or demand that it be taken sooner, and himself, though directed by defendants in early March to pick the navels and follow with the other oranges, took until March 29th to finish picking the navels, and then allowed 44 days to elapse after the navels were picked before beginning to pick the other oranges.

It is true defendants made no serious protest at this delay, and the trial court finds that plaintiff complied with defendants' directions as to delivery; but that does not affect this question. Herein is the marked distinction between this case and Bill v. Fuller and Miller v. Hunt et al., in each of which cases the seller insisted that the fruit be taken and the buyer refused to take it. Under the contract, defendants had until long after the times mentioned in this finding to take the fruit. It is difficult to see how they could be charged with the loss on the ground of negligence for not sooner demanding that plaintiff pick and deliver the fruit, when the negligence, if any, is so completely concurred in by plaintiff himself.

It must further be pointed out that the evidence shows beyond question that no one knew certainly to what extent the fruit was frozen until it had passed through the separator, and could not even closely estimate the damage until many weeks after the freeze, when through evaporation of juice from the frost-broken cells the drying disclosed the damage. The horticultural commission on January 5th placed, and until January 25th maintained, a strict embargo on shipments, indeed successfully prohibited shipment of one car of plaintiff's oranges from another point, though no discoverable drying of the fruit had occurred. By plaintiff's own testimony it appears that defendants believed, though mistakenly, that the fruit would fill out again with watering, and that plaintiff agreed to water it. For these reasons it was difficult for either party to know what best to do. In face of these facts, the finding of negligent delay on the part of defendants cannot be supported.

[10] (d) Under the contract defendants had until October 1st to call for delivery of the grapefruit. On August 20th plaintiff sold this fruit to another. The trial court rendered judgment for the difference between the amount received by plaintiff and the contract price. This judgment is proper only under the finding that about June 27th defendants "repudiated said contract and refused to accept any further deliveries of any fruit thereunder," and that plaintiff was "ready, able and willing to deliver" the grapefruit in accordance with the contract and offered to do so, but that defendants "refused to accept or receive the same."

For the finding that plaintiff offered to deliver the grapefruit and that defendants refused to accept or receive it there is no evidence whatever. The finding of repudiation can be upheld only if the failure of defendants to pay for all of the delivered oranges may be deemed to be a repudiation. Under these facts in evidence it clearly cannot. Defendants never evinced an intention to abandon the contract. After the oranges were all delivered and part of them paid for, a controversy arose as to whether under the contract defendants were called upon to pay for the frozen and discarded fruit. There were friendly conversations and letters between the parties looking to a settlement. Heath, Pann, and other witnesses testified positively and clearly to facts which, if true, would show an accord and satisfaction, whereby defendants paid $1,500 for the oranges in one orchard, and plaintiff was permitted to keep those oranges, and was to keep the grapefruit; the payments made for the first deliveries of oranges, frozen and unfrozen, to be received in full consideration for all deliveries of oranges. Plaintiff, though his testimony is not clear, finally denied this settlement, and the court found with him, thereby ending the matter. However, he did keep the grapefruit. According to plaintiff's own testimony —and there is no other upon this subject except that last mentioned—the last conversation respecting settlement was on August 7th, and it ended as follows:

"I said, 'Pann, what is your idea of this?' and he said, 'My opinion is that Mr. Heath don't owe you anything.' I got up and said, 'Good day, gentlemen,' and walked down street." After that, as he says, "I met them occasionally, but never talked to them about any of these matters, and never made any demand on them to pay me before suit was filed."

His other testimony on the subject is:

"Q. Did you ever offer to any of them to pick and make delivery of the grapefruit? A. Oh, repeatedly. The first offer was to Mr. Heath. They were both at Rialto, and frequently were in May, and I said: 'This stuff is dropping bad; it should be picked off.' Heath said they would take every pound of it and pay for every pound. * * * We were not talking about the grapefruit particularly then —it was about the oranges, the whole thing. * * * They did not say they would not take the grapefruit, but I never delivered it to them because I didn't get paid for what I did deliver."

Speaking of the effort at compromise, he said:

"I finally told them—they said that they did not want to take the grapefruit; they were figuring about paying for all the fruit they shipped, and if they would pay for that I was to keep the grapefruit, but they didn't pay for it. In Mr. Pann's office we were trying to compromise, but they did not tell me they would not take the grapefruit."

Later in his testimony:

"Q. Well, then, you never did agree to take the grapefruit? A. No, because it was only part of a tentative agreement that was never carried out, never concluded, never closed."

[11] These facts do not, nor do any facts in evidence, show a repudiation of the entire contract or any refusal by defendants to take the grapefruit. According to the testimony of plaintiff himself, the reason why he did not deliver the grapefruit was "because I didn't get paid for what I did deliver"—referring to the delivered oranges. Plaintiff made no tender of the grapefruit before selling it, and the buyer's mere failure to pay for the oranges did not warrant plaintiff in treating the entire contract as abandoned and suing for loss of profits. Palm v. Ohio, etc., R. R. Co., 18 Ill. 217.

There is nothing against this view in Jensen v. Goss, 39 Cal. App. 427, 179 Pac. 225, and Minaker v. California Canneries Co., 138 Cal. 239, 71 Pac. 110, cited by plaintiff. In each of these cases the purchaser showed a clear intention to violate the contract, and in each case it was held that rescission was thereby justified. The holding of S. F. Bridge Co. v. Dumbarton L. & I. Co., 119 Cal. 272, 51 Pac. 335, is that the failure to make agreed monthly payments called for by a contract is a substantial breach thereof, justifies the other party in refusing to proceed thereunder, and enables him to maintain an action in quantum meruit for the value of work and labor done. The relief sought by plaintiff here is different from that granted in any of these cases. Here the plaintiff has not rescinded, but, seeking to keep the contract alive for the purpose of recovering lost profits, he sues for the profits which he would have realized had the contract been performed. This he may do only if he has been "prevented" from himself performing—the third of the species of relief for breach of contract pointed out in McConnell v. Corona City Water Co., 149 Cal. 65, 85 Pac. 929, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1171. In the case of Cox v. McLaughlin, 52 Cal. 596, and 54 Cal. 605, it was held that the mere failure to pay an installment due under a contract, while justifying rescission and recovery of the value of the work actually done, does not entitle one to this third species of relief—does not authorize the abandonment of the contract and its performance and at the same time an action to recover the benefits that would have been received had there been performance, which is what the plaintiff here is seeking to do.

Another consideration leads to the same end. As already seen, the delivery of the oranges frozen beyond the degree proscribed by the act of May 3, 1915, was illegal. Defendants were not obliged to pay the contract price therefor. A refusal to do that, the doing of which the law forbade, could scarcely be deemed a repudiation of a legal obligation.

Other points are raised and have been considered, but we deem those passed upon determinative of the appeal.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

(60 Cal. App. 92)

In re REES' ESTATE.

REES v. TITLE INS. & TRUST CO.

(Civ. 4056.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 6, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 5, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 1, 1923.)

1. Executors and administrators ⇐11—Right to set aside deeds made by decedent held property supporting administration.

A claim of a right to set aside deeds made by decedent constitutes property of the estate in the nature of real property upon which administration may be had.

2. Executors and administrators ⇐11—Appointment of administrator discretionary where sole property of decedent is equitable right to set aside deeds.

It is discretionary with a probate court to appoint an administrator where the only property of a decedent is an equitable claim of a right to set aside deeds made by decedent.

3. Executors and administrators ⇐11—Appointment of administrator, where only property consisted of equitable claims, held not an abuse of discretion.

Where deeds made by a decedent were set aside, although the right to appeal existed, a probate court, in appointing an administrator for the estate, on the ground that the right to set aside such deed would support the administration, did not abuse its discretion.

4. Executors and administrators ⇐18—That widow who has absolute right to general letters of administration has claims adverse to estate does not disqualify her.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1365, giving an absolute right to letters of general administration to decedent's widow or to her nominee, the court, after having exercised its discretion to grant general letters, had no discretion to determine as to whom they should go, and that the widow claimed an interest adverse to the estate did not disqualify her or her nominee to act.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Bertin A. Weyl, Judge.

Petition by Llewellyn Rees and the Title Insurance & Trust Company, for the appointment of a general administrator in the estate of Lewis Rees, deceased. From an order appointing the Title Insurance & Trust Company,and denying the petition of said Rees, he appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court; MYERS, J., not participating.

W. D. Van Nostran and C. Ibeson Sweet, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ford & Bodkin, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an appeal by Llewellyn Rees from an order appointing Title Insurance & Trust Company the general administrator of the estate of Lewis Rees, deceased. The determination of the appeal is involved in a somewhat complex chronology of the events leading up to the order from which the appeal is taken. On September 3, 1919, Lewis Rees executed to Mary L. Rees, his wife, a deed conveying certain of his real property; on September 17, 1919, he executed to her an instrument of like character, conveying other, and apparently the remainder, of his real property; on September 19, 1919, the deed of September 17 was placed of record; on March 2, 1920, Lewis Rees died intestate; on June 17, 1920, Llewellyn Rees and John H. Rees, sons of decedent, filed their petition for special letters of administration in the matter of their father's estate, and on the same day the petition was granted; on June 24, 1920, the special administrators commenced an action against Mary L. Rees to cancel the deed of September 17, 1919, and summons was served on the defendant on the day the complaint was filed; on June 25, 1920, Mary L. Rees placed of record the deed of September 3, 1919; on June 29, 1920, the special administrators commenced an action against Mary L. Rees for the purpose of canceling the last-mentioned deed; on June 30, 1920, Llewellyn Rees filed his petition for general letters of administration in the matter of his father's estate; on September 1, 1920, Mary L. Rees filed written objection to the granting of the petition of Llewellyn Rees, the ground of objection being that as Lewis Rees in his lifetime had conveyed all his property to her, he left no estate to be administered upon; on June 8 to 17, 1921, the two actions to cancel the deeds, having been consolidated by stipulation, were tried together; on June 22, 1921, Title Insurance & Trust Company, as the nominee of Mary L. Rees, filed its petition for general letters of administration in the matter of the estate of Lewis Rees, deceased; on July 18, 1921, Llewellyn Rees filed his contest in opposition to the granting of letters to Title Insurance & Trust Company; on August 16, 1921, the trial court rendered its judgment canceling the deeds of September 3 and 17, 1919; on August 23, 1921, Llewellyn Rees filed his amended contest opposing the granting of letters to Title Insurance & Trust Company; on August 31, 1921, Mary L. Rees filed her notice of intention to move for a new trial of the two actions for cancellation; on November 1, 1921, the petitions of both Llewellyn Rees and Title Insurance & Trust Company for general letters of administration came on for hearing, and the court made its order appointing Title Insurance & Trust Company, and denying the petition of Llewellyn Rees. It is from this order that the present appeal is prosecuted.

[1] Notwithstanding the objection of Mary L. Rees to the petition of Llewellyn Rees for general letters, made upon the ground that decedent left no property to be administered upon, the trial court found upon the hearing of the two petitions for general letters that decedent left real property of the value of more than $10,000. This finding is assailed as having no support in the evidence, but we think the support for it is ample. The claim of the right to set aside the two deeds of September, 1919, was property upon which administration might be had (Estate of Daughaday, 168 Cal. 63, 141 Pac. 929); and, laying aside the question whether, in strictness, such a right is real property, it is evident that in the present instance the probate court treated it as such. There was an allegation in both the contest and the amended contest of Llewellyn Rees that decedent left personal property of the value of about $15,000. This allegation was found to be untrue. There can be, therefore, no doubt that the court had in mind the equitable claim to set aside the two deeds when it found that decedent left real property of the value of $10,000. It is to be remembered that the judgment setting aside the deeds had been rendered two and a half months before the making of the order from which the present appeal is taken. This circumstance probably impelled the court to place a value of $10,000 upon the right which was in litigation in the two cases, the pleadings of Llewellyn Rees alleging that the property itself which was the subject of the deeds was of a value of from $75,000 to $100,000. As the claim of the right to set the deeds aside was the only property which the court could have had in mind in making the finding assailed, it, of course, did have that property in mind. The finding was supported by the evidence.

[2] It is the rule that it is discretionary with a probate court to appoint an administrator where the only property of a decedent is such an equitable claim as the special administrators sought to enforce in the present instance. Estate of Daughaday, supra. It is contended under this rule that the court abused its discretion in appointing respondent, for the alleged reason that, being the nominee of Mary L. Rees, respondent is but her agent and creature, and will obey her every behest as administrator, and will act under her control in discharging its trust. It is said that it would have been improper for the court to have appointed Mary L. Rees, the position being taken that she, if appointed, would have become plaintiff, as administrator, against herself individually, as defendant, in the two actions to set aside the deeds. Waiving the contention that respondent, by virtue of its appointment, is under the servility to Mary L. Rees which is attributed to it, we cannot see merit in the point made by appellant. The discretion reposed in a probate court under the decision in Estate of Daughaday is not as to the person who shall be named as administrator, but as to whether an administrator shall be named at all.

[3] It is plain to us that the discretion was not abused here. As we have already observed, the trial court had pronounced its judgment setting aside the deeds before the appointment of respondent was made. This circumstance might well have impelled the probate court to the view that the claim of right to cancel the instruments was both tangible and valuable, notwithstanding that a right of appeal still existed. The court doubtless felt that the rendition of the judgment removed the claim from the category designated by the Supreme Court in the opinion in Estate of Daughaday, when that tribunal says that—

"It is not within the contemplation of the law that the mere assertion of any claim, however visionary and unsubstantial, shall call for the issuance of letters of administration and to that extent give a form of judicial sanction to unfounded pretensions."

Further, the court had already given "a form of judicial sanction" to the claim by the appointment of special administrators to enforce it, for special administrators may be named only (italics being ours) "to collect and take charge of the estate of the decedent, * * * and to exercise such other powers as may be necessary for the preservation of the estate." The special administrators having brought the actions for cancellation of the deeds to the successful issue of a judgment in the superior court, the probate department of the court surely exercised its discretion rightly in determining to replace the special administration with a general one.

[4] The court having concluded to issue general letters, it had no discretion to determine to whom they should go. The statute gave the absolute right to letters to Mary L. Rees or to her nominee. Code Civ. Proc. § 1365; In re Dorris, 93 Cal. 611, 29 Pac. 244; Estate of Brundage, 141 Cal. 538, 75 Pac. 175. The fact that Mary L. Rees claimed an interest adverse to the estate did not disqualify her or her nominee to act as administrator, nor deprive her or her nominee of the right to act as such.

"It is admitted that the appellant was not disqualified by reason of his adverse claim to property claimed by the estate. [Citing cases.] Our statute prescribes the grounds of disqualification, and the courts have no right to add to the disqualifications prescribed by the Legislature. The fact of adverse claim is urged by the respondent solely as a justification of the exercise of the discretion of the superior court in favor of respondent, it being claimed that under the law the court was invested with the power to appoint either of the applicants; in other words, that the appointment was in the discretion of the court. The appellant claims that, under the circumstances of this case, he had the absolute right to letters of administration as against respondent, and that the court had no discretionary power whatever. This claim of appellant must, under the statutes and decisions, be sustained." Estate of Brundage, supra.

In a later case dealing with the question here presented, after announcing that section 1365, Code of Civil Procedure, fixes the order in which persons are entitled to letters of administration, the Supreme Court said that—"The law affords ample remedies to all parties interested in the estate against the acts of any administrator who may be found not to have the best interests of the estate at heart. In the first instance, they will be protected by an adequate bond exacted of the administrator, and in the next, he is subject to prompt removal for any unwarranted failure to recover and preserve the estate's assets." Estate of McCausland, 170 Cal. 134, 148 Pac. 924.

If it be said that the probate court should have considered, in resolving whether general letters should issue, that such letters must at all events issue to Mary L. Rees or her nominee, we are yet of the opinion that the discretion of the court was not abused.

It is also contended by appellant that Mary L. Rees has elected her remedy in defending the suits to cancel the deeds, and that therefore she was precluded from petitioning for letters of administration or from naming another person to make such petition. Without entering into an extended discussion of the point, we conclude that there is no room in the case for the application of the doctrine of the election of remedies. There is, in a legal sense, nothing inconsistent in the two positions taken by Mary L. Rees. If it were proper that general letters should issue in the matter of the estate, she or her nominee was entitled to them, notwithstanding that she was a defendant in the cancellation suits, and that she insisted therein upon the validity of the deeds. Such is the effect of decided cases which we have already cited.

Order affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

(60 Cal. App. 106)

PEOPLE v. CASDORF et al. (Cr. 637.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 11, 1922.)

1. Indictment and information ⟸110(3)—Sufficient to charge criminal syndicalism in language of statute.

To satisfy the requirements of Pen. Code, §§ 950–952, with respect to certainty as to the offense charged and the particular circumstances thereof, it is sufficient to charge violation of the Criminal Syndicalism Act of 1919 in the language of the statute.

2. Criminal law ⟸1144(18), 1160—Appellate court bound by trial judge's decision overruling motion for new trial, and assumption is that counter affidavits were accepted as true.

The appellate court is bound by the trial judge's decision overruling defendants' motion for new trial as far as any conflict exists between the affidavit in support thereof and the prosecuting attorney's counter affidavit, the assumption being that the judge accepted the latter as containing a true statement of the facts.

3. Criminal law ⟸1144(10)—Prosecutor assumed to have acted in good faith in stating that witnesses admitting certain fact would be arrested.

It must be assumed on appeal from a conviction of violating the Criminal Syndicalism Act of 1919 that the assistant district attorney, in stating in the presence of witnesses that all witnesses admitting membership in a certain organization would be arrested and charged with criminal syndicalism, acted in good faith for the purpose of warning them of the consequence of incriminating themselves, so that they might decline to testify.

4. Criminal law ⟸956(4)—No prejudice shown by affidavit for new trial that appellant's witnesses were rendered less efficient by prosecutor's threat to arrest witnesses.

A statement, in an affidavit supporting a motion for new trial following conviction of violating the Criminal Syndicalism Act, that defendants' witnesses were rendered "less efficient" because of the assistant district attorney's statement in their presence that witnesses admitting membership in a certain organization would be arrested and charged with criminal syndicalism, held not to show prejudice to defendants' substantial rights, being a mere conclusion.

5. Criminal law ⟸956(4)—No prejudice shown by statement that witnesses were scared away by prosecutor's statement.

A statement, in an affidavit supporting a motion for new trial, that witnesses were scared away by the prosecutor's statement that witnesses admitting a certain fact would be arrested and charged with the offense charged against defendants, held not to show prejudice to the latter's substantial rights, in the absence of any statement of the names of the witnesses and what their testimony would be.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

J. A. Casdorf and Earl Firey were convicted of violating the Criminal Syndicalism Law, and they appeal. Affirmed.

R. W. Henderson, of Bakersfield, E. S. Smith, of Centralia, Wash., and Austin Lewis, of San Francisco, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. [1] The first point made by appellants is that the trial court should have sustained the demurrer to the indictment on the ground that it did not conform to the requirements of sections 950, 951, and 952 of the Penal Code, "in that there is uncertainty as to the offense charged and the particular circumstances of the offense charged." It is admitted, however, that they were accused in the language of the statute, in that:

"They were, and each of them was then and there willfully, unlawfully, feloniously and knowingly a member of an organization, society, group and assemblage of persons known and designated as 'The Industrial Workers of the World,' sometimes known and referred to as the I. W. W. and sometimes known and referred to as the 'One Big Union,' which said organization, society, group and assemblage of persons was then and there organized and assembled to advocate, teach and abet criminal syndicalism."

This question has been recently considered by this court in the case of People v. Roe, 209 Pac. 381, wherein the charging part of the indictment was in the identical language of that before us, and it was held to be sufficient to so follow the language of the statute. We may refer also to People v. Steelik, 187 Cal. 361, 203 Pac. 78, and People v. Taylor, 187 Cal. 378, 203 Pac. 85, cited in the Roe Case, wherein the same doctrine is enunciated. The question must be deemed settled adversely to the contention of appellants and no further discussion is called for.

It is urged that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. In this connection the particular contention is that the character of the organization after the enactment of the Criminal Syndicalism Act of 1919 (Stats. 1919, p. 281) was not shown to have been within the inhibition of the law. There is a claim that the organization, in compliance with public sentiment as embodied in said statute, changed its purposes and modified its methods, and that the evidence of what was advocated and practiced by the society related entirely to the old organization and not to it in its present form. In this appellants are in error. It is true that a large portion of the voluminous transcript is taken up with a recital of what the organization taught and practiced prior to 1919, but our examination of the record has convinced us that it reveals sufficient basis for the implied finding of the jury that in February, 1922, defendants were members of "an organization, * * * which said organization, society, group and assemblage of persons, was then and there organized and assembled to advocate, teach and aid and abet criminal syndicalism" as that term is defined in the statute. Indeed, the evidence of the character of said organization in the case at bar is substantially the same as in People v. Roe, supra, and we may refer to that decision as a complete answer to this contention of appellants.

[2] The only other point upon which reliance is had is disclosed by the following affidavit of E. S. Smith used on the motion for a new trial:

"E. S. Smith being first duly sworn, upon his oath says: That he is one of the attorneys for the defendants above named; That 10 witnesses for the defense in the above-entitled case, Walter Smith, P. Beasley, B. Kyler, A. E. Anderson, Thos. O'Mara, W. Rutherford, Chas. B. La Rue, Tom Zanger, H. M. Edwards and J. Nash, were arrested before they left the courtroom and shortly after leaving the witness stand; that some of said witnesses were chained together just outside the courtroom and were marched down the corridor in the presence of several of the jurymen while said trial was in session; that after the first two witnesses, P. Beasley and Chas. B. La Rue, were arrested, in the absence of the jury but in the presence of most of the above-named witnesses and other prospective witnesses, Mr. J. R. Hughes of the district attorney's office, in open court made the statement that all witnesses who would thereafter take the stand in this case and admit they were paid up members of the Industrial Workers of the World in good standing, would be arrested and charged with criminal syndicalism; that in order to properly present defendant's case and explain to the jury the character and nature of the organization known as the Industrial Workers of the World it was necessary to use as witnesses members of the said organization; that by reason of the arrest of witnesses P. Beasley and Chas. B. La Rue the other witnesses above named were intimidated and terrorized so as to render them less efficient as witnesses and other prospective witnesses were scared away; that this affiant believes that the above facts rendered it impossible for the defendants to receive due process of law and equal protection and that they did not so receive. Further affiant sayeth naught except that the above facts are true as your affiant verily believes."

It may be stated that on the hearing of said motion Markham Johnson, a deputy district attorney of Sacramento county, filed the following counter affidavit:

"That he is a deputy district attorney of the county of Sacramento, state of California, duly appointed, qualified and acting as such; that he assisted on behalf of the plaintiff in the presentation of the above-entitled cause of the People of the State of California v. J. A. Casdorf and Earl Firey.

"That in reply to the affidavit filed herein by E. S. Smith, one of the attorneys for the defendants herein, this affiant denies that 10 witnesses for the defense who appeared to testify in the above-entitled cause, to wit: P. Beasley, B. Kyler, A. E. Anderson, Thos. O'Mara, W. Rutherford, Chas. B. La Rue, Tob Zanger, H. M. Edwards and J. Nash, or any, or either of them, were arrested before they left the courtroom of the above-entitled court, and—or shortly after they left the witness stand; and in this connection, affiant avers the truth and fact to be that none of said above-named witnesses were arrested in the courtroom, or shortly after they left the witness stand, but they and each of them were arrested for the commission of a known felony by deputies of the office of the sheriff of the county of Sacramento, state of California, and that said arrests and each of them were made outside of the above-entitled courtroom and without the presence of the jury that was sworn to try the said above-entitled cause.

"And this affiant denies that said arrests, or any of them was for the purpose of intimidating, coercing or terrorizing any of said witnesses, and avers that said arrests did not intimidate, coerce or terrorize any of the witnesses called by said defendants, or either of them, and this affiant further avers that each and every witness called on behalf of said defendants and each of them did appear and was fully examined by counsel for said defendants.

"Affiant further avers that the acts and conduct of said deputies sheriff were not within the presence or hearing of any of the jurors sworn in the above-entitled cause, and were done in absolute good faith and in the performance of their sworn duty as officers of the law.

"This affiant further avers that he fully believes that said defendants received and each of them received a full, fair and complete trial in said cause, and therefore asks this Honorable Court to deny said motion for a new trial."

[3] We must assume that the trial judge accepted the affidavit of the deputy district attorney as containing a true statement of the facts and we are bound by his decision as far as any conflict exists between said affidavits. There is no denial, however, of this important statement in Mr. Smith's affidavit:

"That after the first two witnesses, P. Beasley and Chas. B. La Rue, were arrested, in the absence of the jury but in the presence of most of the above-named witnesses, and other prospective witnesses, Mr. J. R. Hughes, of the district attorney's office, in open court made the statement that all witnesses who would thereafter take the stand in this case and admit they were paid up members of the Industrial Workers of the World in good standing, would be arrested and charged with criminal syndicalism."

[4, 5] The propriety of such remark may be debatable, but we must assume that the assistant district attorney acted in good faith and his purpose was to warn the witnesses of the consequence of incriminating themselves, so that upon that ground they might decline to testify if they so desired. But, at any rate, no prejudice to the substantial rights of the defendants was shown. That those who testified were rendered "less efficient" as witnesses is, of course, a mere conclusion of the affiant and should be disregarded. Likewise, the statement that "other witnesses were scared away" can be accorded no decisive significance in the absence of any statement of the names of the witnesses and what their testimony would be.

No error appears of sufficient gravity to warrant an interference with the verdict, and the judgment and order are therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 79

HENGEHOLD v. NATIONAL CREAMERY & PRODUCE CO. (Civ. 3631.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 5, 1922.)

1. Brokers ⟸94—Authority to sell eggs held limited by written proposal of principal.

Where a broker employed to sell eggs was given by his principal a written proposal containing the terms of the sale to be accepted by the buyer, the agent's actual authority was limited by the terms of that proposal, and he could not consent to any change thereof, so that an alteration of the proposal by the buyer with the broker's consent, but without authority from the seller, destroyed its integrity as the seller's contract.

2. Brokers ⟸94—Broker held not to have ostensible authority to change written contract.

Where a seller had had no previous dealings with the buyer, the latter could claim no implied authority on the part of the broker to vary the terms of the proposal given by the seller to the broker for presentation to the buyer.

3. Brokers ⟸103—Principal not estopped to disavow alteration by broker of which he had no knowledge.

Lack of knowledge by a seller of the change made in the proposition submitted by him to the buyer through a broker forecloses any claim of estoppel or ratification by him.

4. Alteration of instruments ⟸23—Plaintiff held not entitled to recover on contract as it existed before alteration.

A buyer of goods, who altered the seller's proposal after it had been accepted without authority by the buyer's father and delivered to the seller's broker, cannot recover from the seller for breach of the contract on the theory it became a binding contract when first delivered to the broker, since he had repudiated the acceptance of that contract by his father, and especially where he based his action upon the contract as altered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by Charles A. Hengehold, doing business under the fictitious name of Co-operative Grocery Company, against the National Creamery & Produce Company, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Chas. M. Easton, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward M. Selby, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WOOD, Justice pro tem. This action is for damages for breach of an alleged agreement by defendant to deliver certain eggs to plaintiff. Judgment went for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Various points are raised. Only one need be considered, for it is determinative: Was there a contract of sale between the parties?

One Sherod, the representative of a brokerage firm, knowing that defendant had these eggs in storage, telephoned and received from defendant a price on the eggs and authority as broker to sell them. No terms as to time of delivery or of payment were specified. Later Sherod communicated with defendant, saying he thought he had a buyer, giving the name of plaintiff and requesting that an agreement be mailed to Sherod for acceptance. Defendant thereupon prepared, executed, and transmitted to Sherod, in duplicate, a proposal to sell, directed to plaintiff and with a form for plaintiff's acceptance. The proposal was complete and definite. It provided, among other things, for shipment on plaintiff's order at any time before December 1, 1918, and for payment by sight draft attached to bill of lading. Up to this time plaintiff had not agreed to buy the eggs, though he and Sherod apparently had talked about them. On August 6th Sherod called upon plaintiff. After agreeing upon the price to be paid for the eggs, plaintiff went into another part of the store, leaving Sherod with plaintiff's father, who, so far as the record shows, had no authority to sign agreements for plaintiff. The father signed the acceptance on both copies, writing "Co-operative Grocery Ass'n, by F. G. Hengehold," wrote a check payable to defendant for $129 upon account of the contract—just why does not appear, for the proposal did not call for it—handed one copy of the signed instrument to Sherod, and then called the plaintiff. Plaintiff objected to the provision for December 1st delivery. At his suggestion his father, under the acceptance and over the signature to one of the instruments, inserted the words, "Time of delivery extended to December 31, 1918," and handed the check to Sherod. Thereupon Sherod, according to evidence which, under the findings, the trial court must have adopted and deemed an assent to the interlineation, wrote on the margin opposite it: "O. K. Sherod. Rect. paid $129 August 6—18." Plaintiff kept the altered copy. Sherod transmitted the other to defendant with the check. Defendant had no knowledge that its written proposal had been altered until some time after December 1st, and after it had sold the eggs to other parties. The record contains no evidence from which facts contrary to those just recited may be inferred.

[1] Whatever at the beginning may have been Sherod's implied authority as a broker to fix time of delivery and payment, even indulging the rash presumption that under it he had implied power to make on August 6th a contract under which his principal would be obliged to deliver the eggs to plaintiff and have payment deferred at the latter's option as late as December 31st, it is clear that defendant's written proposal, transmitted to its agent for the buyer's acceptance, fixed the agent's actual authority in these respects and limited any implied authority that he might theretofore have had. Sherod was without actual authority to make or consent to the change made by the interlineation. The unauthorized alteration destroyed the integrity of the instrument as defendant's contract. Walsh v. Hunt, 120 Cal. 46, 52 Pac. 115, 39 L. R. A. 697.

[2] No question of ostensible agency is involved, because defendant had no communication or transaction with plaintiff directly. Indeed, he had no dealings with plaintiff except this one through Sherod, and did nothing that would lead plaintiff to believe that Sherod was defendant's agent, except to place in Sherod's hands the form of contract signed by defendant. The implication of this is a denial, not a grant of authority in the agent to change his principal's contract. Harris v. San Diego Flume Co., 87 Cal. 526, 25 Pac. 758; Walsh v. Hunt, supra. By the proposal itself plaintiff was placed upon inquiry. If the proposal as presented did not suit plaintiff, he should have ascertained whether Sherod had power to consent to the change. He could not rely upon the agent's statements or assumption of authority. Blum v. Robertson, 24 Cal. 140; Davis v. Trachsler, 3 Cal. App. 554, 86 Pac. 610; Pease v. Fink, 3 Cal. App. 371, 85 Pac. 657.

[3] Lack of knowledge by defendant of the change in the proposed contract forecloses any claim of estoppel or ratification. Dean v. Bassett, 57 Cal. 640; Lindow v. Cohn, 5 Cal. App. 388, 90 Pac. 485.

[4] Plaintiff's counsel suggests that the proposal, when it was accepted and signed by plaintiff's father and given to Sherod without change, constituted a contract. This cannot be, because plaintiff had not authorized his father to sign for him and immediately repudiated any contract in that form. Furthermore, this action is based upon a contract as evidenced by the altered instrument.

There having been no contract between plaintiff and defendant, there was no foundation for this action, and the judgment must be reversed. It is so ordered.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

60 Cal. App. 215

SOUTHERN TRUST & COMMERCE BANK v. SAN DIEGO SAV. BANK. (Civ. 3970.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 22, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 16, 1923.)

1. Banks and banking ⟸130(1)—Ways in which bank may incur liability for deposit misappropriated by fiduciary stated.

A bank may incur liability for deposits misappropriated by a fiduciary by violating its contract, express or implied, to pay the owner of the fund in strict conformity thereto, by appropriating the fund, with or without the fiduciary's consent to the payment of the latter's debt to it, or by assisting the fiduciary to accomplish the misappropriation with knowledge, actual or constructive, that the fraud is being or about to be perpetrated.

2. Banks and banking ⟸116(6)—Knowledge of cashier's intent to misappropriate fund of ward's estate held not imputed to bank.

A bank cashier's knowledge of his intent to convert to his own use money belonging to the estate of his ward but deposited to and withdrawn from his personal account in the usual course of business, was not knowledge which he would be presumed to have communicated to the bank, so as to render it liable to the ward's estate for the amounts so withdrawn; the bank occupying no fiduciary relation to such estate.

3. Banks and banking ⟸154(8)—Negligence of bank directors in investigating conduct of cashier misappropriating funds of ward's estate held not shown.

Evidence held to support an implied finding that a bank's board of directors were not negligent in failing to make further investigation than they did of reports that the cashier, who misappropriated a fund belonging to his ward's estate, but deposited to and withdrawn from his personal account in the usual course of business, was using liquor frequently and was interested in race horses, so as to render the bank liable to the estate.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank, as administrator of the estate of John Wood, against the San Diego Savings Bank. From parts of a judgment favoring defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 45 Cal. App. 294, 187 Pac. 435.

Glen H. Munkelt and Wright & McKee, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Sweet, Stearns & Forward, of San Diego, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Appeals from stated parts of a judgment of the superior court of San Diego county in an action to recover judgment for the amount of certain trust funds of an estate, which funds were deposited in defendant bank by one E. M. Barber, guardian of the estate.

The complaint is in 21 counts, but relates to only 10 transactions. There are two counts for each transaction except one, which is set forth in three counts. The court gave judgment for the plaintiff on its first and second counts, and in favor of the defendant on all of the other counts. The plaintiff appeals from that part of the judgment which runs in favor of the defendant. There is also an appeal by the defendant, but counsel for defendant admit that the judgment against defendant should be affirmed, because it is conceded that the funds were, in that instance, paid to the defendant, at the time when they were embezzled by the guardian.

By its findings the court determined that on March 20, 1914, and for several years prior thereto, and until the month of May, 1916, E. M. Barber was cashier of the defendant bank; that as such cashier said Barber had exclusive charge of the tellers and clerks, and that all of said tellers and clerks took their orders from him as cashier; that as such cashier he had control and custody of the bank's money and accounts, subject to the direction of the president of the bank and the bank's board of directors, of which board the said Barber was a member; that from the 7th day of January, 1914, down to the month of May, 1916, said Barber was also the guardian of the person and estate of John Wood; that John Wood died on the 2d day of May, 1917, and that the plaintiff is the duly appointed and qualified administrator of his estate. The specifications of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings of the court do not challenge any of the foregoing findings of fact.

Upon the third and fourth causes of action the court found, and there is now no contention to the contrary:

"That on or about the 29th day of June, 1914, the said E. M. Barber received a certificate of deposit from the Farmers' National Bank of Corning, Iowa, for the sum of $8,271.12 payable to E. M. Barber, guardian. That the funds represented by said certificate of deposit were the funds of John Wood. That the said E. M. Barber indorsed said certificate of deposit and placed the same to his personal credit with the defendant, San Diego Savings Bank, and that said E. M. Barber deposited the said $8,271.12 in his personal account with said defendant bank for the purpose and with the intention of embezzling, misappropriating, and converting the said sum, and the whole thereof, to his own use, and that the said sum was by said E. M. Barber embezzled, misappropriated, and converted to his own use. * * * That the said sum of $8,271.12 so deposited to the personal account of said E. M. Barber with the said defendant, and so embezzled and converted to the use of said E. M. Barber, has never been paid to said John Wood, or to any one authorized to receive the same for him."

But the court further made the following findings, concerning which, and each of them, appellant specified and now contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the same:

"That it is not true that the said defendant San Diego Savings Bank with knowledge of the reasons and purposes for which said sum was deposited in the personal account of said E. M. Barber, and, with knowledge that said E. M. Barber intended to withdraw the said sum from his personal account for his own use and benefit, permitted the said E. M. Barber to withdraw the said sum of $8,271.12 from his personal account, and allowed the said sum to be converted to the uses of said E. M. Barber. But, on the contrary, the court finds that the said certificate of deposit was received in the usual course of business, and was deposited by said E. M. Barber in the usual course of business of said bank, and without any knowledge whatever on the part of said defendant bank, and without any notice at all on its part of the reasons or purposes for which the said sum was deposited in the personal account of said E. M. Barber, and with no knowledge or notice that the said E. M. Barber intended to withdraw said sum for his own use or benefit. * * * That said defendant never had any knowledge that the same or any part thereof was embezzled or converted to the use of said E. M. Barber, or was never paid to the said John Wood, or to any one authorized to receive the same for him. That it is not true that the said sum of $8,271.12, which was withdrawn as aforesaid, or any part or portion thereof, was used by said E. M. Barber to pay his indebtedness to the defendant San Diego Savings Bank, or to pay any indebtedness of said E. M. Barber to said defendant, or that said defendant bank received any benefit whatever from the said sum of $8,271.12, or from any part or portion thereof."

On the remaining causes of action the findings of fact are similar to those last above set forth, with the exception that in some instances the moneys of John Wood received by Barber were deposited to an account in the name of E. M. Barber, guardian of John Wood; whereas, in the remaining instances, the money, in the form of checks or drafts to the order of E. M. Barber, guardian, was deposited to the personal account of Barber. Appellant contends that in the case of the Iowa certificate of deposit, and in certain other instances, respondent bank received the benefit of these moneys in this, that the trust funds were used to make good overdrafts of Barber on his personal account. It was shown that from time to time checks issued by Barber against his personal account, when the balance to his credit was not sufficient to meet them, were carried as cash for a week at a time (a little more or less) and not charged to his account until the account showed credits sufficient to meet them. But appellant was unable to prove, and the evidence does not show, the definite fact that at any time the funds of John Wood were used to meet any such deficit in Barber's bank account. The evidence, therefore, was sufficient to justify the court in its finding that the funds of John Wood were not used to pay any indebtedness of Barber to the defendant bank, other than in the one transaction wherein the court gave judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

[1] Appellant does not contend any officer of the bank, other than Barber himself, had actual knowledge of his misuse of these trust funds. In other words, the bank was without knowledge of his misappropriation of the funds, and was without knowledge of his intention to misappropriate said funds, unless the fact that he himself was a director, and was cashier of the bank, and had charge, custody, and control of its money and accounts, as hereinbefore stated, is sufficient to charge the bank with knowledge of the dishonest intentions and acts of the said E. M. Barber, concerning the funds received by him as guardian of the estate of John Wood.

"There are three ways in which a bank may incur liability and be compelled to make good deposits that have been misappropriated by the fiduciary: (1) By a violation on its part of the contract, express or implied, between it and the owner of the fund. The reason for the bank's liability is based upon the general principle that the bank cannot discharge its obligation to a depositor except by payment in strict conformity to the contract of deposit. (2) By appropriating the fund, either with or without the fiduciary's consent, to the payment of the latter's debt to the bank. The reason for the bank's liability is based upon the general theory that the owner of a fund may follow it into the hands of and recover it from any person who has not innocently given value therefor. The action for money had and received is an appropriate form of action in this class of cases. (3) By assisting the fiduciary to accomplish the misappropriation, the bank having knowledge, actual or constructive, that the fraud is being or about to be perpetrated by the fiduciary. The reason for the bank's liability is that it knowingly makes itself a party to a fraud, and must make good the loss that results from the misappropriation." L. R. A. 1915C, note, p. 519.

[2] It is manifest that the defendant in this action is not liable under either one of the first two conditions last above stated. The bank paid the demands of the depositor on presentation of his checks, in strict conformity to the contract of deposit, and did not appropriate any of the trust money to the payment of Barber's indebtedness to the bank, except in the one instance to which we have referred. It only remains to determine whether or not the defendant, by reason of Barber's knowledge of his own dishonest purposes at the time when he drew out the money from the bank, was chargeable with that knowledge, and thereby made itself a party to the fraud.

To put the matter concretely, let us take the item wherein it appears that Barber drew his check as guardian, payable to his own personal order, for $500. He marked the check "Bard loan" (but there was no such loan), and drew out the money. Since it has not been accounted for in any other way, we may say at that very time he intended to and did embezzle that sum of $500. As guardian he was not under obligation to keep the fund on deposit in the bank. In the ordinary course of business the bank was bound to honor his checks. If, on the stated facts, any liability exists, it must rest upon the theory that the bank itself was aware of the depositor's wrongful intention, and was therefore bound to withhold the payment to which otherwise he was entitled.

To the general rule of law that a principal is presumed to have the same knowledge as his agent, counsel for appellant admit that there is an exception to the effect that, where the agent has an interest adverse to that of his principal, it will not be presumed that he has communicated his knowledge to his principal. No doubt that is the law. But counsel for appellant seek to apply to this case a limitation to that exception, which limitation is that, where the principal is a corporation, the corporation is bound by the knowledge of its managing officer, even though such officer has an interest adverse to his principal, and that this is true where such managing officer is the only one acting for the corporation. In support of this contention they refer to McKenney v. Ellsworth, 165 Cal. 326, 132 Pac. 75; Williams v. Hasshagen, 166 Cal. 386, 137 Pac. 9; National Bank of San Mateo v. Whitney, 181 Cal. 202, 183 Pac. 789, 8 A. L. R. 298. These decisions must be read in the light of the fact that in each case the matter involved was a financial transaction wherein the bank was a directly interested party. Thus in the McKenney Case the president of the bank, and who conducted its affairs, held a note made to him by the defendant for $7,500. The payee transferred this note to the bank, for value and before maturity, without indorsing on the note, or otherwise informing any other officer of the bank, that he had received from the defendant $5,000 to be applied on this note. Holding that the bank had notice of this defense, the court said:

"The familiar rule that a principal is bound by the knowledge of his agent, acquired in the course of the agency, rests upon the presumption that the agent will communicate to the principal the facts learned by him, as it is his duty to do. But, says the appellant, where an agent of a corporation 's dealing with the corporation in a transaction in his own behalf, it will not be presumed that he will communicate to his principal facts affecting the transaction. Bank v. Burgwyn, 110 N. C. 267, 17 L. R. A. 326, 14 S. E. 623; McDonald v. Randall, 139 Cal. 246, 72 Pac. 997. This is, no doubt, the general rule regarding the imputing to a principal of notice of facts known to an agent, who is, in the particular transaction in question, acting in an interest adverse to that of his principal. But the rule is not without exceptions. If the agent is in fact acting for his principal in the transaction, even though he may have an opposing personal interest, 'it is his duty, notwithstanding his interest, to communicate to his company (principal) any facts in his possession, material to the transaction, and the law will therefore presume, in favor of third persons, that he made such communication.' Bank of Pittsburg v. Whitehead, 36 Am. Dec. 186, note; Le Duc v. Moore, 111 N. C. 516, 15 S. E. 888."

In the case at bar the defendant did not occupy any fiduciary relation to the estate of Wood. Defendant was simply the debtor of Barber as guardian, or of Barber personally, on a contract to pay him so much money on demand. The depositor's act of demanding and receiving the money from the bank might prepare him for committing the intended crime, but it was not a part of the act of embezzlement. When he applied to his own use the money so withdrawn, he ceased to act for the bank. The manner in which the guardian should keep his trust funds, or how he should dispose of them, were not matters in which the bank had any duty to investigate, or any interest to protect. Therefore the knowledge which Barber had, of his own dishonest intentions or plans, was not knowledge which he would be presumed to have communicated to the defendant.

In that one transaction in this case wherein, as we have seen, the judgment is in favor of the plaintiff, the act of embezzlement consisted of the payment to defendant of funds of the estate of Wood, in satisfaction of indebtedness of Barber to the defendant. There the defendant is chargeable with knowledge of the facts known to the cashier, because in the unlawful act itself he represented the defendant. It therefore became his duty to the defendant, his principal in that transaction, to inform it that the money offered in payment to the bank was stolen money, and it will be presumed, in such case, that this duty was performed. On the other hand, in a transaction to which the bank is not a party, the bank officer does not owe to the bank any duty of communication, and the presumption that such communication has been made does not arise. In the matter now under consideration, the misconduct of E. M. Barber was a violation of his duty to the trust estate. It was that alone, and in it he alone was guilty. We have examined the decisions rendered in other jurisdictions, to which counsel refer. In nearly all of them the bank was a party in interest, which received a benefit from the misappropriation of the trust funds. This was in Lowndes v. City Nat. Bank, 82 Conn. 8, 72 Atl. 151, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 408, from which counsel for appellant have quoted at great length. And even there the court was careful to point out that a bank does not undertake to supervise and safeguard a trust account, or to look after the appropriation of such funds when withdrawn. The liability there enforced was distinctly based upon the principle that—

"A bank may not actively and knowingly participate in a misappropriation of trust funds. It may not become an active co-operating agency to that end, and by such co-operation directly contribute to the consummation of the wrong."

[3] Finally it is contended by appellant that the defendant bank had constructive knowledge of Barber's misappropriations, and is therefore liable. This point is based upon evidence proving that during the period of these defalcations, and for some time prior thereto, the said E. M. Barber had so conducted himself that he should have been an object of suspicion and investigation on the part of the bank; that he was using liquor frequently, was interested in race horses, and that thereby he had attracted the attention of at least two directors of the bank, and others, to the fact that he was unworthy the trust of bank cashier. That he had thus conducted himself is a fact about which there is no doubt. But it does not appear that these matters had been disregarded by the bank so far as they were brought to the attention of the officers. Mr. Gilmore, president of the bank, had noticed that some of Barber's checks were temporarily carried as cash items before they were entered against his account. "He would take the items up shortly after I spoke to him about them. It might be several days afterward." Gilmore denied that he had any suspicion that Barber was drinking and never heard that he was in the habit of visiting saloons or was living beyond his means. He never followed up Barber's accounts. Mr. Sefton was vice president of the bank and its principal stockholder. "I had not heard during these years that Mr. Barber was living beyond his means, playing the races, etc. No one had spoken to me about his living beyond his means, or that he was playing the races. I heard rumors to the effect that he was drinking quite heavily. I also heard rumors to the effect that he was running around saloons a great deal, but I never saw him what I would consider under the influence of liquor. I heard one report to the effect that he was running with women." Mr. Sefton at one time became disturbed about these matters to such an extent that he employed a firm of detectives and had Barber "shadowed" night and day for a period of over 30 days. The result was that he received a report in detail showing that there was absolutely nothing that would justify the rumors. "I further at that time had three reports that had been made, one in regard to a woman, and two in regard to drinking, run down in detail, and they were found to be absolutely false." This was about the year 1914, which would be contemporaneous or prior to most of the dates covered by the present action. Said witnesses denied that during the time in question they ever heard of anything irregular in Barber's accounts.

In view of the foregoing evidence, the court was not bound to decide that the board of directors of respondent bank were negligent in the performance of their duties, and that but for such negligence Barber could not have carried out his embezzlements. Assuming, without deciding, that negligence on the part of the board of directors of the defendant bank in relation to the integrity of their cashier would have any force in supporting the claimed liability of the defendant bank in this case, we are not permitted here to assume that such negligence existed. The implied finding of the court is to the contrary, and that finding is supported by the evidence showing what was done by the officers upon whom the responsibility rested. They did use some care, and they did make some investigation. The fact that they did not investigate further and actually discover the facts which doubtless would have caused them to remove Barber from his position as cashier proves an error of judgment. But it does not necessarily prove negligence. The president or directors of a moneyed institution are not required by law to adopt a system of espionage in relation to their officers. "Should any circumstance transpire to awaken a just suspicion of their want of integrity, and it be suffered to pass unheeded, a different rule would prevail if a loss ensued; but, without some fault on the part of the directors, amounting either to negligence or fraud, they cannot be liable." Briggs v. Spaulding, 141 U. S. 132, 11 Sup. Ct. 924, 35 L. Ed. 662, 674.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; JAMES, J.

60 Cal. App. 202

NEWELL v. McDONALD et al. (Civ. 3671.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 21, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 16, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⊜705 — When storage charges recovered by sheriff within statutory maximum, there can be no reversal in absence of the findings.

Where the amount allowed for storage charges in an action on an indemnity bond given a sheriff attaching an automobile did not exceed the maximum allowed by law to be paid a keeper, that part of the judgment cannot be reversed in the absence of the findings from the record.

2. Sheriffs and constables ⊜147—That sheriff's agent was insubordinate in refusing to release property until payment of charges concerned only the sheriff.

Where sheriff notified to release an attached automobile notified garage with which he had stored it and which refused to release the automobile until payment of its storage charges, and the sheriff ratified and affirmed this stand, the fact that such refusal may have been insubordinate conduct concerned no one but the sheriff, and did not concern sureties on indemnity bond.

3. Attachment ⊜193—Sheriff within rights in demanding payment of storage charges before releasing attached property.

Under Civ. Code, § 3057, giving an attaching officer a lien on the attached property, and Pol. Code, § 4295, prohibiting county officers from performing services without prepayment of fees, a sheriff demanded nothing more than the statute authorized him to require in refusing to release attached property until payment of storage charges.

4. Sheriffs and constables ⊜149—Sheriff held entitled to recover attorney's fees on indemnity bond.

Under an indemnity bond given to secure a sheriff against liability from all damages, expenses, costs, and charges, and all loss and liability by reason of the attachment of property, the sheriff was entitled to reasonable attorney's fees incurred in defending an action brought by one claiming the attached property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Howard A. Peairs, Judge.

Action by D. B. Newell against R. McDonald and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeals. Affirmed.

Emmons, Aldrich & Heck, of Bakersfield, for appellants.

Edward F. Brittan, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The plaintiff, the sheriff of Kern county, prosecutes this suit against R. McDonald and R. McDonald, Jr., on an indemnity bond executed by these defendants as sureties. The action in connection with which the bond was given was entitled Dormitzer v. F. M. Meigs and Consolidated Chemical Company. Dormitzer has since died, and W. G. Sylvester has been appointed administrator of his estate. In that action, after an attachment had been procured by the plaintiff on October 2, 1917, one W. S. Meigs filed a third party claim asserting ownership of the automobile which was the subject of the litigation. The indemnity bond signed by the McDonalds as sureties was to secure the sheriff against liability "from all damages, expenses, costs, and charges, and against all loss and liability, which either said sheriff his heirs, executors, or administrators, shall sustain, or in any wise be put to, for or by reason of the attachment, seizing, levying, taking, or retention by said sheriff in his custody under said attachment of the said property claimed as aforesaid." In the case at bar, after a trial, the court rendered judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,880.68 and costs. The main facts were stipulated. These, in so far as it is necessary to recite them for the purposes of this appeal, are that the plaintiff, as sheriff, by virtue of a writ of attachment issued in the action of Dormitzer v. Meigs et al., levied upon and held possession of the automobile which was the subject of the suit; that W. S. Meigs, not a party to the action last referred to, served a written verified claim, pursuant to section 689 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon the sheriff, claiming the right to possession of the automobile and demanding that the sheriff release it from the attachment; that upon receipt of said verified claim the sheriff notified Dormitzer of the filing of said claim, and that thereupon Dormitzer, as principal, and R. McDonald and R. McDonald, Jr., as sureties, executed and delivered to the sheriff, in order that the sheriff should retain possession of said automobile, a bond of indemnity in the sum of $2,000; that the sheriff thereupon retained possession of said automobile and held the same under and by virtue of said writ of attachment; that thereafter W. S. Meigs sued Newell, as sheriff, and his sureties for possession of the automobile or $1,000, the alleged value thereof, and damages; that on January 28, 1920, judgment was entered in that action for the delivery of said automobile, or, in case that could not be made, for $1,000, the value thereof, and also $1,350 damages for the unlawful detention of the car and for $23.25 costs; that the sheriff paid this judgment for damages and costs, and also $87.55 added costs for storage to the date of judgment and $100 attorney's fees incurred in the defense of the action; that the defendants refused to pay any of the above sums except the amount of $108 which they tendered the sheriff on January 23, 1918, as payment in full for all costs and damages accrued to November 26th (the date on which the sheriff had instructed the keeper to release the car). It was further stipulated that, prior to the trial of the case of Meigs v. Newell et al., T. N. Harvey, the attorney for Dormitzer in the original action, gave the sheriff written notice to release the car from the attachment; that the sheriff in turn wrote to the Bakersfield garage instructing them to release the automobile; this the Bakersfield garage refused to do until costs of storage were paid, and so notified the sheriff, who then gave the same information to Harvey.

Aside from the stipulated facts, the evidence showed that, prior to the date set for the trial of the action of Dormitzer v. Meigs, T. N. Harvey became a judge of the superior court of Kern county, and was therefore disqualified to appear as attorney in that action; that Newell notified the McDonalds of said disqualification, and that, unless they employed other counsel, the sheriff would do so; that the judgment above described was duly and regularly entered in the last-named action; and that the sheriff notified the McDonalds of its entry, and that the time for appeal had not elapsed, and that if they wished to appeal they could select counsel for that purpose. The evidence shows that the sheriff notified Harvey, while acting as the attorney for the plaintiff in the attachment proceeding, that the storage charge was due and must be paid before he would release the car from the attachment, and also the sheriff notified the plaintiff Dormitzer to the same effect. Without reciting the detail of the matter further, it may be said that there is evidence to the effect that the sheriff gave the defendants ample notice of each step that was taken by him after the undertaking here sued upon was executed, and that they failed to defend the original action further or to pay the sheriff his fees and expenses in order that the attachment might be released and further charges be avoided. It also appears that the tender of $108 by defendants did not include cost of storage up to the date of tender.

[1] The record contains evidence contrary to some of both the stipulated facts and those above recited and not stipulated, but such evidence does no more than to create a conflict whose merits will not be reviewed on appeal. As to the reasonableness of the storage charges it must be apparent that, as a mere computation shows that the amount fixed by the trial court did not exceed the maximum allowed by law to be paid a keeper, to wit, $3 per day, and appellant has not seen fit to include the findings in the record, no reversal can be predicated upon that part of the judgment.

[2, 3] The stipulation admits that Newell "did levy upon and seize and take possession of and hold possession of a certain Peerless automobile," etc., that the bond herein sued upon was executed "for the purpose of causing said sheriff to retain possession of the said automobile," and again, from the foregoing and other parts of the stipulation of facts, appellants have concluded their right to question the fact that the possession of the car by the Bakersfield garage was the possession of the sheriff. It appears that the sheriff directed his agent to release the automobile, but the Bakersfield garage did not in fact give up possession or actually comply with such order. This may have been insubordinate conduct, but that would be a matter of concern to no one except the sheriff and the Bakersfield garage; it demanded payment of storage charges, etc. The sheriff ratified and himself affirmed the stand taken by the garage. There can be no question but that in so doing he demanded nothing more than the statute authorized him to require. Cases cited by respondent amply sustain this proposition. Civ. Code, § 3057; Pol. Code, § 4295; Perrin v. McMann, 97 Cal. 52, 31 Pac. 837; Robinett v. Connolly, 76 Cal. 56, 18 Pac. 130.

[4] The sheriff was entitled to recover for reasonable attorney's fees under the provision heretofore quoted from the bond sued upon. Also the court had authority to determine that $200 was such a fee. Tunstead v. Nixdorf, 80 Cal. 647, 22 Pac. 472.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 120

DUNCAN v. WOLFER et al. (Civ. 3966.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 11, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 8, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 8, 1923.)

1. Mortgages ⇐42—Statute does not prescribe form of trust deed to secure payment of notes.

Civ. Code, § 865, providing that the grantee or devisee of real property subject to a trust acquires a legal estate therein as against all persons except the trustees and those lawfully claiming under them, does not contain any directions concerning the form of a trust deed intended to secure the payment of notes.

2. Mortgages ⇐331—Trust deed held to confer power on trustee to sell and convey title.

A deed, conveying property in consideration of an indebtedness to the grantee to have and to hold in trust to enforce the payment of the debt, with provisions giving the trustee power to sell in case of default, was in the customary form for a trust deed to secure the payment of debt, and authorized the trustee to sell, and pay the debt; the contention that the habendum clause could not control the granting clause, and that therefore the deed was in form an absolute deed, intended as a mortgage, which must be foreclosed by action, being unsound.

3. Mortgages ⟸309(1) — Quitclaim deed by trustee under two deeds held not to release first trust deed.

Where the same company was trustee under first and second deeds of trust, a quitclaim deed by it reconveying to the grantor without warranty all the estate and property described in the second trust deed did not release the first deed of trust.

4. Mortgages ⟸25(1)—Purchaser under trust deed can reconvey to debtor and take back trust deed for part of the price.

Where property was sold under a trust deed after the original debtor had conveyed it subject to the trust deed, the purchaser from the trustee could agree to reconvey it to the debtor for a stipulated price, part of which was represented by a note secured by a new trust deed, and the new trust deed would be valid even though the original debtor's purchase inured to the benefit of his subsequent grantees.

5. Estoppel ⟸47—Title, subsequently acquired under trust deed excepted from conveyance, does not inure to grantee.

Where a warranty deed conveyed land expressly subject to an existing trust deed, a title, subsequently acquired by the grantor from the purchaser at the trustee's sale, did not inure to the benefit of the grantees.

6. Mortgages ⟸374—Recitals in trust deed of compliance with conditions held sufficient.

Recitals in a trustee's deed, showing compliance with all the conditions prescribed by the trust deed for a valid sale, are sufficient.

7. Mortgages ⟸353—Stipulation for advance notice of trustee's intention to sell held personal covenant only.

Where a trust deed, which had previously stated the terms and conditions under which the trustee could sell for nonpayment of the note secured thereby, stated at the end that no action should be taken thereunder to sell the property until six months' notice of intention to sell had been given, the latter clause must be construed as a personal covenant only, otherwise it would be inconsistent with the earlier terms of the deed, and the earlier terms would control, under Civ. Code, § 1070.

8. Appeal and error ⟸761—Objection to want of affidavit required by uncited statute held insufficient.

In a suit to quiet title, where defendants claimed under a trustee's sale, a contention by plaintiff, on appeal from judgment for defendant, that evidence was not given of the making of a moratorium affidavit, which was supported by no reason or authority, and which contained a citation apparently of some statute, but so deficient as not to show what statute was intended, does not require reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; J. P. Wood, Judge.

Action to quiet title by S. H. Duncan against William Wolfer and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James M. Gammon, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Ward Chapman, L. M. Chapman, and Joseph Musgrove, all of Los Angeles (Fred O. McGirr, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action to quiet title to a parcel of land in the city of Los Angeles. Defendants, by their answer, disputed the plaintiff's title. In addition thereto, certain claims of title were asserted by the defendants. The court entered judgment determining that the defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company is the legal owner of said real property, as trustee under a certain trust deed given to secure an indebtedness in favor of the defendant Vogel; that the defendant Albert B. Jones is the owner of the property subject to said trust deed and subject to a described lease in favor of the defendant Frank Fisher. The plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

It is agreed that on June 12, 1911, William Wolfer was the owner of said real property. On that day Wolfer and his wife executed a deed of trust, granting the property to Title Insurance & Trust Company as security for the payment of a promissory note of the same date, due three years after date, executed by the grantors to J. L. Hancock, in the principal sum of $15,500. It was stated in this deed that in consideration of said indebtedness and for the purpose of securing payment thereof, the grantors did thereby "grant, bargain, sell, convey and confirm" unto the party of the second part the described property, "to have and to hold the same upon the trusts, hereinafter expressed, to wit." Then followed a statement of the terms of the trust, with provisions giving to the trustee power to sell the property in case of default by said debtors. On the same day the same grantors made a second deed of trust to Title Insurance & Trust Company, on the same property, to secure a note of that date in the sum of $2,500, payable to Isobel Loomis Hill. The provisions of this trust deed were in like form as the Hancock trust deed. Both deeds were recorded, at the same time on June 30, 1911. On September 16, 1913, on payment of the Hill indebtedness, the trustee quitclaimed and reconveyed to William Wolfer, "without warranty," all the estate and property described in said Hill deed of trust and by said deed of trust granted to the trustee.

By deed of date June 21, 1911, recorded June 30, 1911, Wolfer and wife granted the same property to Telford, who subsequently granted it to Dobson, who thereafter, on August 20, 1912, granted the same property to Philip L. Wilson by deed recorded August 28, 1912. The three deeds last mentioned contained declarations to the effect that they were subject to each of said trust deeds of June 12, 1911.

By deed dated November 11, 1916, recorded November 15, 1916, Philip L. Wilson and his wife, Maud N. Wilson, granted the property to A. E. Brown, stating therein that the conveyance was subject to the Hancock trust deed. By deed of trust of the same date, and recorded at the same time Brown conveyed the property to Title Guarantee & Trust Company as security for a note of the same date executed by Brown to Maud N. Wilson, in the sum of $4,500. It was provided therein that this trust deed was subject to the Hancock trust deed. The Wilson trust deed conveyed the property "in trust, however, with power of sale * * * to have and to hold the same to the party of the second part and to its successors and assigns * * * upon the trusts and confidences hereinafter expressed, to wit."

There were then set forth the terms of the trust, with provision for power to sell in the event of default in the payment of the debt. Since no other differences have been pointed out, we shall assume that this deed was in like form as the Hancock trust deed, excepting only the differences shown by the clauses which we have quoted.

On the 20th day of February, 1918, pursuant to notice given in accordance with the Hancock trust deed, the Title Insurance & Trust Company, as trustee under that deed, offered said real property for sale at public auction, and sold the same to H. Oscar Vogel, he being the highest and best bidder therefor, for the sum of $18,125.17. Thereupon, pursuant to that sale, the trustee granted the property said Vogel, by deed of the same date, recorded March 20, 1919. By deed of the same date, also recorded March 20, 1919, H. Oscar Vogel conveyed the property to William Wolfer. By trust deed dated February 1, 1919, recorded March 20, 1919, Wolfer and wife granted the property to Title Insurance & Trust Company as security for a note in the sum of $12,000, dated February 1, 1919, and due three years after date, payable to Herman O. Vogel. By deed dated November 19, 1919, recorded December 30, 1919, Wolfer and wife deeded the property to Kenneth McLennan. McLennan thereafter executed a lease to Eva I. Lufkin, who later assigned that lease to defendant Fisher. Subsequent to the execution of the lease, McLennan conveyed the property by deed of grant to defendant Albert B. Jones.

On December 28, 1918, pursuant to notices given and sale made under the terms of the Wilson trust deed, Title Guarantee & Trust Company executed a deed purporting to convey the property to the plaintiff S. H. Duncan. This is the deed under which the plaintiff claims title, contending that this title is superior to that of the defendants in whose favor judgment has been entered. From the foregoing recital of facts (and assuming that the reconveyance of September 16, 1913, by the Title Insurance & Trust Company to William Wolfer, operated only to restore the title acquired by the company under the Hill trust deed, and did not affect the trustee's title acquired by the Hancock trust deed), it appears that the title acquired by Herman O. Vogel through the trustee's sale under the Hancock trust deed is superior to the title claimed by the plaintiff as purchaser from the trustee under the Wilson trust deed; unless it be held that, as contended by the plaintiff, the Hancock trust deed was only a mortgage given to secure the indebtedness of Wolfer to Hancock.

Appellant contends that the Hancock trust deed should be construed to be only a mortgage whereby a lien was imposed on the property as security for the payment of the Hancock note; that as a mortgage it could not be enforced except by judicial proceedings in foreclosure and a decree ordering sale to be made, subject to the debtor's right of redemption; that from and after June 12, 1918, the right to foreclose was barred by the statute of limitations, and the mortgage had ceased to be a lien upon the property described therein; that thereafter the Wilson trust deed had acquired priority, and consequently that the plaintiff became the owner of the land by virtue of the trustee's deed to him pursuant to valid proceedings for the enforcement of that trust deed.

Counsel for appellants say that the Hancock trust deed failed to vest title in the trustee, and failed to confer upon the trustee any power of sale, because the granting clause preceding the habendum clause of the trust deed was in the terms of an unqualified grant without the words "in trust with power of sale," or their equivalent; that the premises contain[illegible] the granting clause are irreconcilable with the habendum clause, which provided that the Title Insurance & Trust Company, to whom the grant had been made unconditionally in the premises, was "to have and to hold the same upon the trusts hereinafter expressed, to wit," etc.; that the authorities are to the effect that where the habendum is irreconcilable with the premises, the premises must prevail; that since, under this construction, the trust deed did not differ from any other deed in the form of a grant deed, and since it further appeared therein that it was given as security for a debt, therefore the case comes under the rule of those decisions which hold that where a deed in the form of a deed of grant is made as security for the payment of a debt, the instrument is a mortgage and can be enforced only by process of foreclosure.

[1] Counsel for appellant rely upon certain Code provisions and decisions to which we now briefly refer. We cannot agree that section 865 of the Civil Code contains any directions concerning the form of a trust deed. It only defines the rights of a grantee or devisee of real property that is subject to an existing trust. It relates to the situation where the trustor, having first created the trust, conveys or devises the same property to other persons. The words of the section are:

"The grantee or devisee of real property subject to a trust acquires a legal estate in the property, as against all persons except the trustees and those lawfully claiming under them." MacLeod v. Moran, 153 Cal. 97, 100, 94 Pac. 604.

Parks v. Gates, 32 Cal. App. Dec. 725, cited by appellant, was superseded on rehearing by a judgment of the Supreme Court, wherein it was held that—

"Under the rules of construction the whole instrument must be read together to determine the effect of a deed, and the habendum may be resorted to as a limitation upon the estate granted." Parks v. Gates, 186 Cal. 151, 154, 199 Pac. 40, 41.

[2] The other decisions referred to under this head in the brief for appellant are not more in point than the Code section and the Court of Appeal decision to which we have referred. The Hancock trust deed contains, in a form which for many years has been customary, the provisions of a trust deed creating an express trust for the purpose of securing the payment of a debt, and with adequate powers of sale in the event of default made by the trustors in payment of their debt. The rule that the trustee, by complying with the requirements of the trust deed as set forth therein may pass title to a purchaser at the trustee's sale, is thoroughly established by decisions in this state. Koch v. Briggs, 14 Cal. 256, 73 Am. Dec. 651; Herbert Kraft Co. v. Bryan, 140 Cal. 73, 80, 73 Pac. 745.

The other contentions of appellant, to which we have referred in connection with his claim that the Hancock trust deed should be construed as a mortgage, all depend upon the question raised as to the nature of that deed. They necessarily fail when it is determined that that instrument was a deed of trust, carrying with it the powers and consequences which, as we think, sustain the title acquired by the purchaser at the trustee's sale.

[3] Appellant contends further that the deed of reconveyance made by Title Insurance & Trust Company to William Wolfer, on payment of the Hill indebtedness, passed the title back to Wolfer free from the Hancock trust deed, because the Title Insurance & Trust Company was the grantee in both deeds, and in its deed of reconveyance did not specifically reserve its rights under the Hancock trust deed. But the reconveyance shows on its face that it was limited, and intended to be limited, as a reconveyance of the estate conveyed to the trustee under the Hill trust deed, upon payment of the indebtedness secured thereby. This being so, it did not in any way affect the rights conferred or the title conveyed by the Hancock deed of trust, any more than if the latter document had been a conveyance to a different trustee.

[4] It will be noted that, although the purchase price named in the sale from the trustee to Vogel was $18,125.17, the sale was followed by a deed from Vogel to Wolfer and a trust deed back from Wolfer, for the benefit of Vogel, to secure an indebtedness of $12,000. In this connection, the evidence shows that these transactions were pursuant to an arrangement made between Vogel and Wolfer whereby Wolfer paid over to Vogel the difference between those two sums and gave Vogel a note, to be secured by said new trust deed, in the sum of $12,000. Appellant claims that the sale was in effect a sale to Wolfer, and not to Vogel, and that by reason thereof it should be held that, if any title passed by that deed, it was a title vested in Wolfer free from any further effect of the Hancock trust deed; and that thereupon the trustee under the Wilson trust deed became vested with a complete title, no longer subject to any prior claim under the Hancock trust deed. But this result could not follow unless it can be said that, by virtue of the facts stated, the sale itself was not a genuine sale. This argument might have some plausibility if Wolfer had advanced the entire amount of the debt then due to Vogel, for then it might be claimed that the debtor had paid the debt, and that under those circumstances there was no power of sale, but only a duty of the trustee to reconvey to the trustor. But it is clear that at the time of the trustee's sale, the full sum bid by Vogel was then owing to him. He had the right to make a contract whereby, upon acquiring the title, he would be able to dispose of it on suitable terms. Unquestionably, then, Vogel had the right to sell and convey the property to Wolfer or to any other purchaser, and to accept in consideration thereof, either in whole or in part, an obligation secured by a deed of trust of the land thus conveyed by him. Under this view of the case, the property should be held subject to the Vogel deed of trust, even if it were determined that the beneficial ownership thus conferred upon Wolfer inured to the benefit of the plaintiff.

[5] Since the title of defendant Jones, derived by him from McLennan, rests upon the deed of November 19, 1919, from Wolfer to McLennan, its validity depends upon Wolfer's ownership of the property (subject to the Vogel trust deed) at the last-mentioned date. Plaintiff claims as successor to the title granted by Wolfer to Telford on June 21, 1911. He contends that, even conceding the validity of the trustee's deed to Vogel, the grant by Vogel to Wolfer ipso facto passed to the plaintiff the title thus acquired. This contention is based upon section 1106 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"Where a person purports by proper instrument to grant real property in fee simple, and subsequently acquires any title, or claim of title thereto, the same passes by operation of law to the grantee, or his successors."

In reply it is sufficient to call attention to the fact that the deed of Wolfer to Telford was by its terms made subject to the Hancock trust deed. The fact was thus recognized that Wolfer was not conveying to Telford a title "in fee simple," as against the title conveyed by the Hancock trust deed. The subsequent sale and deed by the trustee cut off the equity of redemption, which was all that Wolfer had, and all that he could convey. It results that at the time when Vogel conveyed to Wolfer, the plaintiff had no remaining interest in the property. It was the plaintiff's equitable interest only that, while it survived, could draw to it any title acquired by Wolfer.

[6] The Hancock trust deed provided that if default be made in payment of the debt, the trustee should have power to sell the property on written demand by the creditor, "but without the necessity of making demand on the parties of the second part for the payment of any of said sums * * * in the following manner, namely," then stating the manner of giving notice of sale and of conducting the same. The recitals of the trustee's deed to Vogel show compliance with all of these conditions and directions, and that is sufficient. Savings & Loan Society v. Deering, 66 Cal. 281, 5 Pac. 353; Roberts v. Colyear, 179 Cal. 669, 180 Pac. 937.

[7] But at the end of the trust deed is found the following separate paragraph:

"It is expressly agreed by and between the parties hereto that no action shall be taken under the terms of this trust deed to sell the property covered hereby until the makers of the note secured hereby, or their successors in interest, shall have been given six months written notice in advance of the intention to cause any such sale to be made."

Appellant contends that the sale was invalid because there was no proof that this six months' written notice had been given. It does not appear that this point was brought to the attention of the court below in connection with appellant's objection to the introduction of the deed in evidence, and it is without merit. The stipulation is only a personal covenant. It is not a limitation on the power of the trustee to sell and convey. Unless so construed, it is inconsistent with the earlier terms of the deed, which declare the conditions under which sale may be made, and provide that on default by the debtor and demand by the creditor on the trustee to make the sale, the trustee shall sell the granted property after first publishing notice for six weeks. The earlier terms control. Civ. Code, § 1070.

[8] Counsel for appellant next suggests that evidence was not given of the making of a "moratorium" affidavit, to show that the property was not the property of an alien enemy, and that for this reason the deed was inadmissible in evidence. No reason or authority is presented in support of this contention. The citation, apparently of some statute, is so deficient that we are unable to ascertain what statute, either federal or state, was intended. If counsel intended to refer to chapter 106 of the "Trading With the Enemy Act," adopted October 6, 1917 (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, §§ 3115½a–3115½j) we have not been able to learn what provision thereof sustains the contention made.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J; JAMES, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 1

HUTCHINSON v. MILLER & LUX, Inc.

(Civ. 4293.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Nov. 28, 1922.)

1. Highways ⟸197(4)—Automobilist observing lanterns at excavation in daytime held not entitled to assume there would be a red light there when he returned after dark.

An automobile driver, observing common lanterns hanging to balusters leading from the sides to a traveled space near the middle of a road across which an excavation extended while passing such point in the daytime, held not entitled to assume in returning after dark that there would be a red light at the place.

2. Highways ⟸197(6)—Violation of statute as to sufficient headlights on motor vehicle held negligence per se if contributing proximately to accident.

Violation of a statute, such as St. 1917, p. 397, § 13(d), requiring that headlights of motor vehicles give sufficient light to reveal any person or substantial object on the road ahead for at least 150 feet, is negligence per se if it contributes proximately to an accident.

3. Evidence ⟸470—Opinions not admissible where jury or court are equally capable of forming opinion.

Opinions are not admissible where the jury or court acting as such are equally capable of forming an opinion from the facts stated.

4. Evidence ⟸571(6, 8)—Jury not authorized to disregard expert opinion of only witness testifying as to speed of motor car or power and equipment of lights.

In determining the speed of a driver's motor car, or the power and adjustment of his lights, affecting an issue as to his contributory negligence, the jury could not disregard the expert opinion evidence of the only witness who testified on the subject.

5. Trial ⊂=296(4, 5)—Modification of correct requested instructions not cured by other instructions.

Where correct requested instructions on contributory negligence as to negligent driving of automobile were modified by changing the words "proximately contributed to" to read "proximate cause of," thus making the instructions refer to self-inflicted injury, and not contributory negligence, the error was not cured by other correct instructions on contributory negligence by intoxication.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action by Geo. W. Hutchinson, as administrator of the estate of Harry Hutchinson, deceased, against Miller & Lux, Incorporated. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Edward F. Treadwell, of San Francisco (Joseph C. Sharp, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

C. K. Bonestell, of Fresno, and Kitt Gould, of Clovis, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. Harry Hutchinson was killed in an automobile accident, and the plaintiff, as administrator, commenced the above-entitled action to recover damages. A judgment was awarded the plaintiff in the trial court; the defendant made a motion for a new trial, its motion was denied, and the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In its answer to the plaintiff's complaint the defendant denied many of the allegations contained in the complaint, and then it set forth an affirmative defense, the contributory negligence of plaintiff's decedent.

Early in the day on the 20th of April, 1919, plaintiff's decedent, Harry Hutchinson, and his friend, Joe Russell, left their homes at Clovis and went to Firebaugh. While at that place two Mexican boys engaged Hutchinson to drive the party from Firebaugh north to a ranch known as Holland Farm. They started before dark, and while it was yet light they passed a point in the road where an excavation was being made for the purpose of inserting a concrete culvert. The excavation was two miles from Firebaugh, and extended entirely across the road. There was a traveled space in about the middle of the road. From each side balusters 2x4 had been put up on 2x4 posts leading from the property line out to the traveled space just mentioned. The traveled space was very rough, but could be traveled if one exercised care, and Hutchinson drove slowly at about 10 miles per hour over the spot. As they went out they observed common lanterns hanging to the balusters, but the lanterns were not lighted. After passing the excavation the party went on five miles farther to the Holland Farm, where the two Mexican boys got out of the car, and then Hutchinson and Russell started to return to Firebaugh, where they expected to attend a dance. Russell testified that as they returned on the road they were constantly looking for the place where the lanterns and excavation had been seen. The night was dark, and there was no moonlight. They were riding in a Ford car, which was equipped with common Ford lights, and Hutchinson drove at about 20 miles an hour. The witness Russell was the only eyewitness to the accident. Some other persons came after the accident had happened, but they did not see the accident. He testified that they did not see the excavation until they were within 10 or 12 feet of it; that the lights of a Ford shine down a straight road like that about 20 or 30 feet, and it would be all darkness beyond that. He further testified that the lanterns on the balusters were not lighted. As the car hit in the excavation it was turned over to the right; Hutchinson was killed instantly, and the witness was considerably dazed. There was some testimony that the decedent and Russell had taken some drinks of intoxicating liquor during the day. All of the foregoing testimony was developed in the presentation of the case for the plaintiff.

At the end of the plaintiff's case the defendant moved the court to grant a motion for a nonsuit, and specified, as a ground of its motion, the contributory negligence of the plaintiff's decedent. The motion was denied, and the defendant thereupon introduced testimony on some other matters connected with other branches of the case. But no testimony was introduced by the defendant which conflicts with the testimony quoted above.

The defendant's theory concerning contributory negligence covered three separate propositions: (1) That the decedent was under the influence of intoxicating liquor at the time of the accident, and that his intoxication proximately contributed to the accident; (2) that, well knowing the dangerous condition of the road, the decedent negligently drove his car, and thus proximately contributed to the accident; and (3) that at the time of the accident the decedent was guilty of contributory negligence in driving after dark in a car which was equipped with lights which did not comply with the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1915, p. 397). Relative to the first element of the defendant's case, evidence was introduced by the defendant on the subject of intoxication. Thereafter the trial court instructed the jury, giving certain instructions which are not numbered, but which we have numbered by the use of the Roman numbers.

I. "You are instructed that the plaintiff cannot recover if the negligence of the decedent proximately contributed to the injury which caused his death."

II. "You are instructed that at the time of the said injury it was illegal to drive a motor vehicle on a public highway by a person while under the influence of intoxicating liquor to such an extent that he cannot properly operate or drive the same."

III. "If you find that at the time of the accident the decedent was under the influence of intoxicating liquor to such an extent that he could not properly drive or operate said car, and that that fact proximately contributed to the accident, then you will find a verdict in favor of the defendant."

By its verdict the jury found against the defendant on the issue of intoxication, and no question is presented in this appeal thereon.

[1] Contending that the decedent encountered a known danger in a reckless manner, and cannot recover, the appellant cites and relies on such authorities as Buckingham v. Commary-Peterson Co., 39 Cal. App. 154, 178 Pac. 318. The respondent replies:

"The deceased was not looking for dangers at the time. What he was looking for was the red light which he had every reason to suppose would be at this place to warn him that he was approaching it."

But the answer to that reply is:

"Under all the circumstances and conditions existing, and with which he was perfectly familiar, he had no right to so assume." Murray v. Southern Pacific Co., 177 Cal. 1, 8, 169 Pac. 675.

[2] At the time of the accident it was provided by law (St. 1917, pp. 382, 397):

"The headlights of all motor vehicles upon the highway shall give sufficient light to reveal any person, vehicle, or substantial object on the road directly ahead of such motor vehicle for a distance of at least 150 feet. * * *"

[3, 4] It is the settled rule in this state that the violator of a statute is guilty of negligence per se if such violation contributes proximately to the accident. The portions of the record relied upon by appellant sustaining the attack based on the statute above quoted are to be found in the testimony given by the witness Russell, the only witness who testified on the subject. He was riding with deceased at the time of the accident. His testimony on these matters was as follows:

"Q. And you know that the lights were turned on before you got to the warehouse? A. Yes, sir. Q. And the car was equipped with electric lights, of course? A. Yes; common Ford lights. Q. Now, then, you say as you were riding along you were looking for these lights on this place? A. Yes, sir. Q. And you knew the place was there? A. Yes, sir; I knew the place was there. Q. And so did Mr. Hutchinson? A. Yes, sir. Q. How far do the lights on a Ford, down a straight road like that, shine? A. About 20 or 30 feet. Q. How is that? A. About 30 feet. Q. It would be all darkness beyond that? A. Yes, sir. Q. That is your judgment. How fast were you traveling down that piece of road? A. About 20 miles an hour. Q. Did you have any speedometer on your car? A. No, sir."

The respondent's reply to this attack by the appellant is to the effect that, when the witness Russell testified that the lights shone 20 or 30 feet, and that the car was going 20 miles an hour, he was giving expert evidence, and that expert evidence is not necessarily binding on the jury. It is true that in some instances expert evidence is not binding on the jury. McLean v. Crow, 88 Cal. 644, 649, 26 Pac. 596. It is also true that there are cases in which expert evidence is necessary to the determination of the issue (Houghton v. Dickson, 29 Cal. App. 321, 155 Pac. 128), and it is likewise true that not every opinion is necessarily expert evidence, and that many opinions are received from witnesses other than the expert witness (22 C. J. p. 530, § 612). Under the latter rule, witnesses who stood by and saw the movement have been allowed to testify regarding the speed of moving vehicles. Kramm v. Stockton Electric R. Co., 22 Cal. App. 737, 754, 136 Pac. 523. However, it is also true that the opinions of a witness are not admissible where the jury, or the court acting as such, are equally capable with the witness of forming an opinion from the facts stated. Raymond v. Glover, 122 Cal. 471, 476, 55 Pac. 398; Spencer v. Collins, 156 Cal. 298, 307, 104 Pac. 320. But in the instant case it is quite impossible to conceive that the jury could determine the speed of the decedent's car, or the power and adjustment of his lights, if the jury disregarded all of the evidence in the record on those subjects.

[5] From what we have stated above, it becomes very clear that the rights of the defendant in the instant case hung wholly upon the second and third theories concerning contributory negligence; that the condition of the record so far as the evidence is concerned, was shown and the foregoing attacks were made by the respondent in making its motion for a nonsuit. However, the respondent did not offer any additional testimony, nor did he seek to cure any of the foregoing defects. Neither were the defects cured by any testimony thereafter introduced by the appellant. When the record stood in that form, and as the defendant closed its case, the defendant prepared and asked the court to give instructions which the court modified and then gave as follows:

III. "You are instructed that at the time of the accident involved in this case the law required that at all times, during the period from a half hour after sunset to a half hour before sunrise, every automobile while on a public highway shall carry at the front at least two lighted lamps showing white or yellow lights visible under normal atmospheric conditions at least 500 feet in the direction toward which such automobile is faced, and that such headlights upon all motor vehicles upon the highway shall give sufficient light to reveal any person, vehicle, or substantial object on the road directly ahead of such motor vehicle for a distance of at least 150 feet, and shall also give sufficient side illumination to reveal any person, vehicle, or substantial object 10 feet on the side of such motor vehicle at a point 10 feet ahead of the lamps."

IV. "You are instructed that, if the automobile of the decedent was not equipped at such time and place with the lights described in the last instruction, that the same was illegally operated by the decedent, and such illegal operation as a matter of law constituted negligence, and, if the same proximately contributed to (was the proximate cause of) the said injury, the plaintiff cannot recover."

(Trial court crossed out "proximately contributed to" and inserted parenthesis).

V. "You are instructed that, if you find that the decedent would have been able to have seen the obstruction within time to stop or slow down if his motor vehicle had been equipped with lights of such a character that they gave sufficient light to reveal a substantial object on the road directly ahead of such motor vehicle for a distance of at least 150 feet, and that the car of the decedent was not equipped with such lights (and that the failure to have it so equipped was the proximate cause of the accident), then you are instructed to find a verdict in favor of the defendant."

(Trial court inserted parenthesis.)

It is not claimed that instructions III, IV, and V in the form requested were improper in any respect, and no legal objection has been called to our attention. In the form requested they were instructions on contributory negligence, and concretely applied the law to the case on trial. In the modified form the instructions were not on contributory negligence, but became instructions on the subject of self-inflicted death. The respondent suggests that, as all instructions are to be read together, instruction No. I helps out the meaning of instructions III, IV, and V. We do not agree with the suggestion. Instructions Nos. I, II, and III can be said to assist each other because all deal with contributory negligence. But they do not assist III, IV, and V, which deal with self-inflicted injuries. As the jury was instructed it might well assume, and by reason of its verdict it doubtlessly did assume, that intoxication was the only element of contributory negligence which it was called upon to determine. To have a fair trial the defendant was entitled to have the jury fully and fairly instructed on all of the issues of and concerning contributory negligence, and it prepared and requested such instructions. In legal effect, some of those instructions were refused.

The judgment should be reversed; and it is so ordered.

I concur: NOURSE, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 187

GUSCETTI v. DUGAN et ux. (Civ. 4360.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 20, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 15, 1923.)

1. Cancellation of instruments ⟸24(2)—Consideration received for deed held so small it need not be returned before rescission.

Where the only consideration received by grantor for the conveyance of a two-family apartment house consisted of a few meals furnished to him, the agreement for his support being oral and unenforceable, and the cash payment having been applied to the expense of preparing the deed, the failure of the grantor's administratrix to tender a return of the consideration before rescinding the conveyance for mental incapacity, as required by Civ. Code, § 1691, is immaterial, since the maxim, "De minimis non curat lex," applies.

2. Cancellation of instruments ⟸22—Demand and refusal held sufficient notice of intention to rescind.

Where the complaint to set aside a deed for mental incapacity alleged that the defendants had refused upon demand to deliver possession of the property to plaintiff and to account to plaintiff for the rents, which allegations were undenied, a judgment for plaintiff will not be reversed on the ground that no notice of intention to rescind was given, since no specific form of notice is required.

3. Deeds ⟸211(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding grantor was of unsound mind.

Testimony by several witnesses as to facts warranting a conclusion the grantor was of unsound mind, in connection with the execution of a deed conveying his property practically without consideration to grantees, whom he had known for only a few weeks, held to warrant the trial court's finding that the grantor was of unsound mind, so as to be subject to rescission under Civ. Code, § 39.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action to set aside a deed by O. L. Guscetti, administratrix of the estate of Louis A. Bassi, sometimes known as Louis Bassi, deceased, against John Dugan and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Hearing denied; WILBUR, C. J., dissenting.

John J. O'Toole, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Louis Ferrari, of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This appeal is by the defendants from a judgment declaring null and void a certain deed purporting to convey title to certain real property in San Francisco, Cal., from plaintiff's intestate to defendant John Dugan. Said judgment also directed the said defendant to convey to plaintiff, as administratrix, all his right, title, and interest in said real property and awarded to the plaintiff the rental value of the premises from the date of the deed until the surrender of possession.

In the early part of April, 1919, Louis A. Bassi, since deceased, was the owner and in possession of the real property in controversy. He was at that time a man between 60 and 70 years of age, whose closest living relatives were a sister and her daughter. The sister had been living in the northern part of the state for about 2 years. The property in controversy consisted of a lot of ground in San Francisco, Cal., upon which was situated a flat or two-family dwelling place. Bassi was living in one room of this flat. The upper flat was rented, and the lower one was to let. The defendant John Dugan, and his wife lived a few blocks away from the Bassi property. Mrs. Dugan had never met Bassi prior to the first part of April, 1919, at which time, hearing that his flat was for rent, she went to see it. She found Bassi engaged in cleaning up the premises and discussed with him the renting of the flat. He asked her if she would allow him to keep a room in the flat and if she would furnish him board. He asked her to talk the matter over with her husband, stating that he would call at her home the next day for her decision. He called the next day and was told by Mrs. Dugan that the arrangement was satisfactory to Mr. Dugan. Mrs. Dugan asked the amount of rental of the flat and was told: "If you take care of me and leave me in the house, I will fix that up later." Bassi then commenced certain repairs and improvements in the flat in accordance with the requests of Mrs. Dugan. She cleaned up the room which he was occupying and placed in it some of her own furniture. Bassi called at her home for two or three weeks for his breakfasts and sometimes for his suppers during the time the repair work was being done. He had been suffering from some stomach disease for some time and was restricted in his diet. Mrs. Dugan testified that about a week after her first conversation with Bassi he said to her: "I know I can always make my home with you and I will deed you the flats for taking care of me." Nothing was done about the matter, however, and on April 27, 1919, Mrs. Dugan and her husband moved into Bassi's flat. On May 1, 1919, Bassi went to the hospital and remained there until his death on May 26th. On May 12th, while in the hospital and just before submitting to a surgical operation, he executed a deed conveying the property in question to John Dugan. At the time of the execution and delivery of the deed, Dugan and a notary public whose services he had secured were present in the room with Bassi. Bassi signed the deed and asked Dugan for some money. Dugan handed him $10, which was immediately handed to the notary in payment of his services in preparing the deed. It is conceded that no consideration, other than what appears from the foregoing recital of facts, passed from the defendants to deceased.

The plaintiff, as administratrix of the estate of Louis Bassi, deceased, brought this action to cancel and annul the deed to defendant John Dugan, alleging:

That "on the 13th day of May, 1919, and for several days prior thereto, the said Louis A. Bassi was infirm in mind and body and was of unsound mind to such an extent that he was unable to understand the nature of an act in signing or executing any instrument; that on the 13th day of May, 1919, the defendant John Dugan and Jane Doe Dugan, well knowing the said Louis A. Bassi was of unsound mind, as aforesaid, procured an instrument in writing in the form of a deed conveying or purporting to convey to said John Dugan all the real property hereinabove described."

The action was dismissed as to Mrs. Dugan, she not being a grantee in the deed.

The trial court found:

That "on the 13th day of May, 1919, and for several days prior thereto, the said Louis A. Bassi, sometimes known as Louis Bassi, was infirm in mind and body and was of unsound mind to such an extent that he was unable to understand the nature of an act in signing or executing any instrument."

[1] The first contention of appellant is that the plaintiff did not plead nor prove any rescission of the contract; that, as it was found that a cash consideration of $10 was paid by John Dugan, and that said John Dugan also promised, orally, to maintain and support Bassi for the remainder of his life, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to restore everything of value which her intestate had received under the contract. Reliance is placed upon section 39 of the Civil Code, providing that a conveyance or other contract of a person of unsound mind, but not entirely without understanding, made before his incapacity has been judicially determined, is subject to rescission, and also upon section 1691 of the Civil Code, providing that a party rescinding a contract must do so promptly and restore to the other party everything of value which he has received from him under the contract, or must offer to restore the same, upon conditions that such party shall do likewise.

We think that, under the peculiar facts in evidence and as found by the court in this case, the plaintiff has done all that is required of her. The $10 which was handed to Bassi by Dugan was to pay the fee of the notary public in drawing the deed, and was so used. Bassi received no benefit from this. The breakfasts and occasional suppers which were furnished to him for two or three weeks before he went to the hospital were furnished at first under an indefinite agreement that Bassi would "fix it up later," and that Mrs. Dugan would never be sorry for what she did for him. Apart from the fact that the oral promise to support Bassi for the remainder of his life, which the court has found was made by Dugan, was unenforceable because such a promise is required to be in writing, it does not appear from the findings just when such promise was made. Plainly, from the evidence, it had not been made at the time Mrs. Dugan started to provide Bassi with his breakfasts; so in the beginning such meals could not have been furnished in execution of such promise. For it appears from the evidence that at first these meals were furnished under Bassi's vague promise to "fix it later." If anything was furnished to Bassi in execution of Dugan's promise to maintain him for life, it could have been, at most, but a few meals. Mrs. Dugan testified that the first suggestion of conveying the property in return for maintenance was made by Bassi about a week after she had met him, and Dugan's promise of maintenance must have been made some time later. Within a month from the date of the first meeting of Bassi and Mrs. Dugan, he was in the hospital and defendant admits that he paid none of Bassi's expenses at the hospital. Therefore, under any view of the evidence, Bassi received from the defendant, in execution of the promise to maintain him for life, merely meals for a few days, which meals consisted of soft-boiled eggs and stewed fruit, according to Mrs. Dugan's testimony. The amount involved is so negligible that we think plaintiff's neglect to offer to return the value of these meals need not concern us here under the maxim, "De minimis non curat lex."

[2] It is also contended by appellants that the plaintiff failed to prove that she had given notice to defendant of her intention to rescind. However, the complaint alleges that the defendants have refused, upon demand, to deliver possession of the property in controversy to plaintiff, and that said defendants have also refused, upon demand, to account to the plaintiff for the rents of said property. These allegations were not denied. No specific form of notice of an intention to rescind is required, and we apprehend that the rights of the defendants were fully satisfied by any notice which would convey to them, within a reasonable time, the idea that the plaintiff wished to cancel the deed and recover the property. No contention is made that the plaintiff did not act promptly upon discovering the facts.

[3] The only other point raised by the appellants is based upon a contention that the evidence is insufficient to warrant the finding that Bassi was of unsound mind at the time he made the deed. We shall not discuss this matter at length. It is sufficient to say that the testimony was conflicting, but that the record does include the testimony of several witnesses which would warrant the finding of the trial court. Added to this there is the force of circumstances so unusual as to suggest, in themselves, a departure from the normal and natural course of human actions. It is true, as contended by appellants, that the circumstances surrounding the transaction are insufficient, alone, to justify a finding of mental unsoundness, and one is at liberty to dispose of one's property in an unusual and unexpected manner without the imputation of mental incompetency. However, the circumstances of this case take on a special significance when viewed in connection with the testimony of plaintiff's witnesses, some of whom had known Bassi for many, many years, as to his weakened and abnormal mental state.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 154

In re HAMON'S ESTATE. (Civ. 388!.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 15, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1923.)

1. Trusts ⇐262—Evidence held to sustain finding trustee was negligent in making a loan.

Evidence that the land mortgaged to secure a loan made by a trustee was arid land, which it was practically impossible to irrigate, and that the trustee made the loan upon the statements of one man, whom she knew, and a written report by three strangers, two of whom were the former owners of the land who had conveyed it to a dummy for the purpose of securing the loan thereon, held to sustain the trial court's finding that the trustee was negligent in making the loan, and was therefore bound to make good the loss.

2. Trusts ⇐179—Trustee must use at least care of ordinarily prudent person.

A trustee must use at least the degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would use in connection with the transaction involved.

3. Wills ⊂612(5)—Gifts over contained in separate paragraph fixing time of possession relates to death before possession.

Where the sixth clause in a will made an absolute gift of half of the residue, a separate paragraph in the eighth clause that, if the donee died without issue, his share should go to another, grammatically and logically applies to the main subject-matter of the section in which it was contained, which related to the time for the payment of the share to the donee.

4. Wills ⊂439—Object of construction is to ascertain testator's intent.

In all cases the single object of inquiry in determining the construction of a will is to ascertain the intent of the testator.

5. Wills ⊂612(1)—Statute that clear devise or bequest is not limited by other words not equally clear held applicable.

Where the sixth section of a will gave half of the residuary estate absolutely to a nephew, while the eighth section provided that the share of the estate should be paid to the nephew upon his marriage or his attaining the age of 30 years, and, if he died without issue, should be paid to another, the provision of Civ. Code, § 1322, that a clear and distinct devise or bequest cannot be affected by any other words not equally clear and distinct is relevant, so that the provision for gift over cannot apply after the nephew reached his thirtieth birthday, and became entitled to his share.

6. Wills ⊂612(1)—Later clause held not irreconcilable with earlier.

A later clause in a will, providing that the share of a nephew in the residue should be paid to him on his marriage or on his thirtieth birthday, and if he died without issue, should be paid to another, was not irreconcilable with an earlier clause, giving the nephew an absolute interest in the residue, so as to be within Civ. Code, § 1321, providing that, where there are irreconcilable provisions in a will, the latter must be adopted.

7. Wills ⊂441—Circumstances held immaterial in determining construction.

Where there were no circumstances showing a reason why testatrix should prefer her niece over her nephew, but the niece was already married, while the nephew was young and still unmarried, the circumstances afford no aid in construing a provision for payment of the nephew's share to the niece on his dying without issue, so that Civ. Code, § 1318, requiring examination of the circumstances to construe a doubtful will, is of no aid.

8. Trusts ⊂327—Trustee can be required, in proceedings for accounting, to pay over money to persons entitled.

In proceedings by a trustee for a final accounting, the court had authority to require the trustee to pay over to the beneficiary the amount of a loan negligently made by the trustee upon insufficient security, and to require the beneficiary to assign the mortgaged property to the trustee.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Mary A. Hamon, deceased. Fron a judgment sustaining objections of Percival James Langdon against the report of Ada Miriam Parker, as trustee under the will, the trustee appeals. Affirmed.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

D. H. Laubersheimer, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The appellant, Ada Miriam Parker, was appointed executrix of the will of Mary A. Hamon, and also a trustee to receive certain property devised thereunder and to manage it as directed by the will. The will was probated and in due time the court made its final decree of distribution by which one half of the property was distributed to Ada Miriam Parker individually, and the other half, consisting of $3,695.14 in cash and small items of personal property, to her as trustee for Percival James Langdon. She loaned the money held in trust upon real estate security. A more detailed statement will be made of this transaction later. However, this mortgage was subsequently foreclosed and the appellant, at the foreclosure sale, as trustee, bought the property for $5,079.57, being the full amount of the principal, interest, judgment, and costs. The trustee reported to the court under section 1699, Code of Civil Procedure, and prayed for her discharge. Thereupon Langdon appeared, and filed objections to the report on the ground that the real estate security was valueless, and also of alleged negligence on the part of the trustee in making the loan. Upon the hearing the trial court sustained the objections to the report, and ordered the mortgage representing the loan to be reassigned to Ada Miriam Parker, and directed that she pay the cash legacy received by her as trustee, with interest, to the beneficiary Langdon. Findings of fact were made, and judgment rendered as above indicated, and from this judgment the trustee Ada Miriam Parker appeals.

[1] The first ground of appeal, and the one most strongly urged, is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings that said trustee was grossly and willfully negligent in making said loan, in that she did not exercise ordinary care and diligence in the execution of her trust, or in ascertaining the value, character, or location of said land prior to making said loan; * * * that said land had no commercial or market value at the time said loan was made; nor had it any commercial or market value since; that said trustee could have ascertained the value, character, and location of said land prior to making said loan had she exercised any or ordinary care or diligence in the execution of her trust, and similar findings concerning the trustee's purchase of the property at the foreclosure sale. The facts relating to this matter as they appear without substantial conflict are as follows: One Muncy was the first person to speak to the trustee, Mrs. Parker, concerning the loan; he informed her that J. P. Grantz and Mildred Grantz desired a loan upon a plot of ground consisting of 320 acres in Kern county. From Muncy, whom she had known for a period of 30 years, the trustee secured her principal information concerning the property. In one part of her testimony she said, "I took Mr. Muncy's word for it." She also received reports of three other persons, Ryder, Smith, and Boxrund, but she knew nothing of these men except what Muncy told her. She did not talk with Mr. Grantz until after the loan was made. A written report was made by Ryder, Smith, and Boxrund, stating that the land in question was "arable, fertile soil, and all tillable," and placing an appraised value at $25 per acre upon it. Grantz made a written application for the loan, in which he stated that the land was of a cash value of $25 per acre. The papers were approved by the trustee's attorney, and she testified that she relied upon his judgment, as well as upon that of Muncy's. Grantz furnished a certificate of title showing ownership in him and Mildred Grantz, his wife. Mrs. Parker made no investigation concerning Ryder, Smith, Boxrund, or Grantz. She testified that after the loan was made Grantz paid some interest, and then sold the land to one Knowles, who assumed the mortgage and kept up the interest for a time.

It appears from the evidence that previous to the making of the loan Muncy had purchased the land for $5 per acre from a railroad company. Witnesses called by Langdon testified that the land is typical mesa desert land, covered by sagebrush, yucca, greasewood, etc.; that it is impossible to place water on it by a practical pumping lift; that it was unimproved and had never been tilled; that it was not worth more than $2.50 per acre at the time the loan was made, and that the value was the same at the date of the hearing. One witness testified that the land was practically worthless, and that its only value would be for speculative purposes.

Before loaning the money Mrs. Parker was informed by Muncy where the property was located. Although it does not appear that she knew the true situation, it was shown at the hearing that Muncy and Ryder were the original purchasers of the land; that Grantz was practically only a dummy in the transaction. The deed was taken in his name, and he executed a mortgage, and immediately deeded the property in blank and delivered the deed to Muncy. Smith, one of the men who made the written report to Mrs. Parker, testified on the trial that it is very difficult to borrow money on raw desert land without water, and that in commercial circles such property is not considered a good security.

[2] It can hardly be doubted that Muncy and his associates misled the trustee and induced her to loan a substantial sum of money on commercially valueless property. To any one at all informed concerning conditions in the desert region of this state it would be known that land situated as this was without water or any practical way of securing it, has little or no market value, and is not to be regarded as safe security for a loan without at least the lender subjecting it to a most careful scrutiny. A trustee must use at least the degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person would in connection with the transaction involved. Pomeroy's Eq. Juris., § 1070. The trial court was justified in concluding that ordinary prudence would have prevented the making of this loan, and that the trustee did not exercise reasonable care and diligence, and was therefore bound to make good the loss which would accrue to the trustee's estate.

The appellant further contends that the trial court erred in directing the trust money to be given to Langdon in absolute ownership. It is claimed that under the will of Mary A. Hamon, Langdon received only an estate analogous to a fee, terminable upon his decease without issue; that his estate is a contingent one unless and until he marry and have issue.

The sections of the will involved are the sixth and eighth. They are as follows:

"Sixthly, I give, devise and bequeath to my nephew, Percival James Langdon, and to my niece, Ada Miriam Parker, all the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, being the money on hand or in the bank, and all mortgages due me, to be divided equally between them, share and share alike."

"Eighthly. It is my wish and desire that the share going to my nephew Percival James Langdon, shall be paid to him on the day of his marriage, or on his 30th birthday, in case he is not married before the age of thirty years, and it is my further wish and desire that at my death the share coming to my nephew Percival James Langdon, shall be placed in the hands of a trustee hereinafter named, and the same put at interest, and the interest paid semiannually by said trustee to said Percival James Langdon up until the date of his marriage, or in case he is not married, until his 30th birthday, when in either case the entire share coming to said Percival James Langdon shall be paid to him without reservation of any kind whatsoever."

While the will is not free from ambiguity, the intent of the testator is expressed with reasonable clearness, as follows: That after disposing of certain specific articles the residue of the testator's estate is directed to be divided equally between Langdon and Mrs. Parker; that the legacy to Langdon be not delivered to him until his marriage or arrival at the age of 30 years; that upon the happening of either of these events he should receive all of his share without reservation; and, lastly, that should he die before marriage and the birth of issue, or before his thirtieth birthday, his share should go to Mrs. Parker.

[3] Two elements were contemplated by the testator: First. The interest bequeathed Langdon. This is designated in the sixth clause of the will and again in the latter part of the eighth clause. Second. The time of delivery of the legacy. This is found in the eighth clause, and in a separate paragraph of the same clause it is provided:

"If said Percival James Langdon dies without issue, his share is to go to my niece," etc.

Grammatically and logically this qualification applies to the main subject-matter of the section in which it is contained. As so read, it must be held to constitute a provision for the disposition of the legacy in question in the event of Langdon dying without issue before the occurrence of the events giving him the right to receive the legacy.

The most extreme construction that can be placed upon this sentence by way of qualifying Langdon's estate is that, even though he might marry, should he die before his thirtieth birthday without issue, the legacy would go to Mrs. Parker. Having given an absolute estate, it will not be presumed that any later words were intended to qualify it further or in any particular not clearly expressed or necessarily implied. It must be supposed that the testator associated the idea of the birth of issue with marriage. There is no logical connection between the consideration of birth of issue and the event of Langdon reaching his thirtieth birthday. If it be held that Langdon's estate is defeasible to this extent it would avail the appellant nothing, because it was stipulated during the trial that he had arrived at his thirtieth birthday. Upon the occurrence of this event his estate became absolute regardless of the birth of issue.

[4] The legal principles governing the construction of these sections of Mary A. Hamon's will are not in serious doubt. It is elementary that in all such cases the single object of inquiry is the intent of the testator. After considering various sections of our Civil Code bearing upon the matter, and in interpreting a will where the words "dies without issue" were pivotal in the determination of its meaning, the Supreme Court in the Estate of Carothers, 161 Cal. 588, 119 Pac. 926 concludes that the "only rule * * * applicable to such expressions is that the intention of the testator is the primary object of search." Estate of Tooley, 170 Cal. 164, 149 Pac. 574, Ann. Cas. 1917B, 516, is clearly distinguishable from the instant case. In the former the provision of the will made no statement of the estate devised, except that, having given "all my property" to Mattie Tooley, it directed that, "if at her death she has neither husband nor children," it should be divided among other heirs. The case of the Estate of Carothers, 161 Cal. 588, 119 Pac. 926, is apparently more nearly in point. By the will the testator devised his farm to his wife and son William "during the lifetime of my said wife, and at her death said land with all the improvements and proceeds thereof vests absolutely in and is the property of said William, that in case said William dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of John, and at his death goes to Elizabeth." It was there held that, upon the prior death of the wife, the son William did not become vested with an unconditional and unqualified fee, but that the fee was limited upon the condition of his dying at any time without issue, and that upon his so dying subsequent to the death of the wife the property would pass to John and Elizabeth, successively.

It must be noted that the language which apparently vests the estate absolutely in William is directly qualified. As the opinion puts it, the words vesting the property absolutely are immediately followed, however as part of the same sentence, separated only by a comma, by the words:

"That in case said William P. Carothers dies without issue his property herein specified becomes the property of John Thomas Carothers, and at his death goes to Elizabeth Witherspoon." (Italics ours.)

[5, 6] In the will being interpreted by us the estate to Langdon is devised absolutely in the sixth section, and the provision directing that it shall go to some one else if he dies without issue is contained in an entirely different and distinct section. Thus, while in the Estate of Carothers the entire clause being construed was not "a clear and distinct" bequest, in the instant case we have such a bequest of an absolute estate to Langdon. Hence section 1322 of our Civil Code providing that "a clear and distinct devise or bequest cannot be affected * * * by any other words not equally clear and distinct," is relevant. Had the language limiting the estate devised to William been totally disconnected from that giving him an unqualified estate, and had such qualifying language upon a consideration of both words and context been susceptible of a construction which would have permitted the provision for an absolute estate to stand, it is apparent that the estate devised to William P. Carothers would have been held an absolute one. Certainty is perferred to uncertainty. Mary A. Hamon left no uncertainty in her devise of an absolute ownership of one-half of the residue of her estate, including the money here involved, to Langdon. That residue was bequeathed to Mrs. Parker and to him share and share alike. The most that can be said of the clause in the other section involved is that it creates an uncertainty as to whether the testator intended the words "dies without issue" to refer to death before the testator, or death before Langdon's marriage, or before his thirtieth birthday, or to death at any time. To hold that it means death at any time would place a higher value on uncertainty than upon certainty as a goal in interpretation. Nor is this a case within the scope of section 1321, Civil Code, in which it is provided that where there are irreconcilable provisions in a will, the latter must be adopted. These provisions are not irreconcilable.

[7] We are not unmindful of the provision of section 1318 of the Civil Code that in the case of uncertainty arising upon the face of a will as to the application of any of its provisions the circumstances under which the will was made are to be looked to in ascertaining the intention of the testator. The circumstances shown by this record are of no great value. There is nothing to indicate that Mary A. Hamon had a greater affection for one of her residuary legatees than for the other. Mrs. Parker was already a married woman; hence the reason which constrained the testator to attach a provision concerning marriage to her legacy to Langdon would have no place in her bequest to Mrs. Parker, and its absence indicates nothing. These two legatees were related in the same degree to their deceased ancestor. There is some authority for the proposition that, where a primary legatee is unmarried, and an absolute legacy is followed by a limitation over, if the legatee die without issue, there is a presumption that the testator means the limitation to refer to death at any time. However, this inference is less strong where the primary legatee is young than where he is advanced in age. In the former event there would be more reason to suppose that the testator anticipated the likelihood of the legatee marrying and having issue before the termination of the particular estate, and therefore the presumption would be more probable that death without issue was intended by Mary A. Hamon to have reference to Langdon reaching his thirtieth birthday, for he was apparently less than 24 years of age. On the whole, there is nothing in the circumstances tending to indicate any different intention on the part of the testator than that which is shown by the wording of the will itself.

[8] Another ground upon which appellant assails the judgment is the claim that the court had no jurisdiction to make the order that Langdon assign the mortgage to the trustee and deliver the assignment to the clerk of the court, and that thereupon the trustee pay to Langdon the amount which the court found was due him. It is asserted that the power of the court was limited to finding the facts and settling the account as to its amount and the items that should be credited or not credited to the trustee, as shown by the report. McAdoo v. Sayre, 145 Cal. 344, 78 Pac. 874, construing the same Code section here under consideration, expressly holds that the court upon final settlement at the termination of the trust has power to direct the trustees to turn over the property to the persons found to be entitled thereto. The same decision goes on to say that, not only has the court such authority, but it is its duty to make all orders necessary to entirely invest the beneficiary with possession, title, and all required evidences of title to the property determined to be rightfully his upon distribution of the trust estate. Cases cited by the appellant not in accord with McAdoo v. Sayre were decided before the enactment of section 1699, Code of Civil Procedure, under the authority of which the appellant asked the court to grant her discharge.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 180

PEOPLE v. NAVARRO. (Cr. 1039.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 18, 1922.)

1. Prostitution ⊂=4—Knowledge of pimp held proved.

Testimony showing that prosecutrix committed acts of prostitution while cohabiting with accused at his solicitation and connivance was sufficient evidence, in prosecution for pimping, that accused had knowledge of her prostitution.

2. Prostitution ⊂=4—Compensation for soliciting held proved.

Though accused did not receive any money from a prostitute, evidence that he stood at the door of her room and received the money from men who entered, without giving any of it to her, was sufficient to prove that he solicited and received compensation for soliciting for a prostitute.

3. Prostitution ⊂=4—Evidence held to sustain charge that accused lived on earnings of a prostitute.

Evidence that accused appropriated all the earnings of a prostitute, although he used some of the money to pay for her room rent and to purchase some meals for her, was sufficient to sustain the charge that he lived on the earnings of a prostitute; it not being necessary to show that the money so received was used solely to pay his own expenses.

⊂=For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Michael J. Roche, Judge.

Antonio Navarro was convicted of pimping and he appeals. Affirmed.

Nathan C. Coghlan, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John R. Riordan, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

NOURSE, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of pimping as denounced by the Act of February 8, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 10). This act provides in part:

"Any male person who, knowing a female person to be a prostitute, shall live or derive support or maintenance, in whole or in part, from the earnings or proceeds of the prostitution of such prostitute * * * or who shall solicit or receive compensation for soliciting for such prostitute, shall be guilty of a felony. * * *"

The information upon which defendant was tried was framed in two counts; the first charging him with soliciting and receiving compensation from the prosecutrix for soliciting for her prostitution knowing her to be such, and the second charging him with living and deriving support and maintenance in whole or in part from the earnings of such prostitution. The jury found the defendant guilty upon both counts.

The appeal is from the judgment upon the grounds: (1) That the facts failed to establish the allegation of the first count that the defendant solicited and received from the prosecutrix compensation for soliciting for her as such prostitute; (2) that the evidence is insufficient to support the allegation of the second count that the appellant did "live and derive support and maintenance in whole or in part from the earnings and proceeds of the prostitution" of the prosecutrix; (3) that the evidence is insufficient to prove that the prosecutrix was a prostitute or that the appellant knew her to be such.

[1] Upon the third proposition the testimony of the prosecutrix while under examination by appellant's counsel is as follows:

"Q. Are you a prostitute? A. No, I am not; but while I was with him I was. Q. While you were with him you were? A. Yes, sir."

Other testimony was offered to show that during all the time the acts complained of were committed appellant and the prosecutrix were living together and that the acts of prostitution were committed by her at his solicitation and connivance. His knowledge of her prostitution cannot be doubted.

[2] As to the first proposition, the point is that the appellant did not actually receive from the hands of the prosecutrix any compensation for his work in soliciting for her. The point is that the appellant stood at the door of her room and demanded and received the money from the men who entered without handing any of it over to her. The evidence is ample to support the allegation contained in the first count of the information.

[3] As to the second proposition, the evidence is that prior to the time when the appellant and the prosecutrix entered into their relation he had been engaged in the business of driving a jitney bus from which he obtained his support and maintenance. The prosecutrix testified that when he went to live with her he abandoned this occupation and was engaged solely in soliciting for her; that he appropriated to himself all the earnings of the prosecutrix, which were unquestionably proceeds of her prostitution. It was shown that, during the period of their cohabitation, the appellant paid the room rent and purchased some meals for the prosecutrix and himself. It was not necessary to show that the money he received from her was used solely to pay his own living expenses.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 149

BELL et al. v. SAGE et al. (Civ. 2562.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 15, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 13, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1923.)

1. Chattel mortgages ⟸61—Affidavit of good faith without design to defraud creditors not acknowledgment.

The affidavit required by Civ. Code, § 2957, that a chattel mortgage is made in good faith and without design to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, does not constitute a due acknowledgment of execution entitling the mortgage to be recorded; the statute also requiring that the mortgage be acknowledged or proved and certified.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⟸231(13)—Reading of record is actual notice whether lawfully recorded or not.

The reading of the record of an instrument by an intending purchaser is actual notice to him, whether it is lawfully recorded or not.

3. Chattel mortgages ⟸150(1) — Record of mortgage acknowledged by only one mortgagor is constructive notice of execution by him only.

Under Civ. Code, § 1161, requiring that the execution of an instrument be acknowledged by the person executing it before recording it, the record of a chattel mortgage acknowledged by only one of two or more mortgagors is constructive notice of its execution by him only.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Charles O. Busick, Judge.

Action by T. W. Bell and Charles Le Roy, copartners, doing business as Bell & Le Roy, against Mrs. M. G. Sage, formerly Mrs. M. G. Wilson, F. J. Newman, and others. From part of a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants Newman and another appeal. Reversed with directions.

Charles F. Metteer, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Fred J. Harris and Thomas B. Leeper, both of Sacramento, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The defendants Newman and Rumsey appeal from that part of the judgment of foreclosure of a chattel mortgage entered herein which directs them to surrender possession of an automobile truck and orders the same to be sold.

The chattel mortgage covered the truck and other personal property. At the time the mortgage was executed, the defendant Myron E. Sage was the sole owner of the truck. He and Mrs. M. G. Wilson joined in the execution of the mortgage. All the parties to the mortgage made the affidavit required by section 2957 of the Civil Code. Mrs. Wilson duly acknowledged her execution of the mortgage, and the same was recorded. Sage did not acknowledge the execution of the instrument. Thereafter Sage sold the truck to appellants. The court found that appellants purchased the truck for value and without actual notice of the mortgage, but that they had "constructive notice thereof by reason of said mortgage being recorded." The facts are undisputed, and the only question presented by the appeal is whether appellants were charged with constructive notice of the mortgage.

[1] The affidavit accompanying the mortgage recites that the parties (naming them), "each being duly sworn, each for himself, doth depose and says: That the aforesaid mortgage is made in good faith, and without any design to hinder, delay or defraud any creditor or creditors," and is signed by all of the parties, including Sage. Respondents contend that this is a sufficient acknowledgment by Sage to entitle the mortgage to be recorded. Section 2957 of the Civil Code provides:

"A mortgage of personal property is void as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers of the property in good faith and for value, unless: 1. It is accompanied by the affidavit of all the parties thereto that it is made in good faith and without any design to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors; 2. It is acknowledged or proved, certified, and recorded in like manner as grants of real property."

The affidavit in this case was drafted in strict compliance with the first requirement of section 2957, and contains nothing which is not thereby required. To hold that such an affidavit constitutes a due acknowledgment would be to ignore the second and additional requirement of the statute that the mortgage must be acknowledged or proved and certified. Clearly, Sage's affidavit was not an acknowledgment of his execution of the mortgage. Adlard v. Rodgers, 105 Cal. 327, 332, 38 Pac. 889; Talcott v. Hurlbert, 143 Cal. 4, 6, 76 Pac. 647.

[2, 3] Respondents maintain that since the mortgage was properly recorded by reason of Mrs. Wilson's acknowledgment, the effect was to give constructive notice of its execution by Sage, citing 1 C. J. 779, Shaw v. Poor, 23 Mass. (6 Pick.) 86, 17 Am. Dec. 347, and Palmer v. Paine, 75 Mass. (9 Gray) 56. In Shaw v. Poor, decided in 1827, the instrument there considered was acknowledged by but one of two grantors and was recorded. The court held that the record was at least presumptive evidence of notice of the conveyance by the grantor who had not acknowledged the execution thereof. This conclusion was apparently based upon the presumption that any one would examine the records before purchasing real estate and that the record of the defectively acknowledged deed, if read, would constitute actual notice. The reading of the record of an instrument by an intending purchaser is actual notice to him, whether it is lawfully of record or not. Parkside Realty Co. v. MacDonald, 166 Cal. 426, 431, 137 Pac. 21. In Palmer v. Paine the court said:

"The purpose of registration is notoriety, and, if it is so acknowledged by any one party to it, it is rightly registered, and then it is regarded as constructive notice to all the world as the deed of all other parties, as if acknowledged by them."

In that case, however, the controversy was between the parties to the instrument, and the court said:

"Registration is not necessary to pass title; as between the parties, the title passes by the deed."

The statutes of Massachusetts now provide that "the acknowledgment of a deed shall be by the grantors or one of them." Hayden v. Peirce, 165 Mass. 359, 43 N. E. 119. Several other states have enacted similar statutes, and decisions based on such statutes are not authority here, where no such provision exists.

In Webb on Record Titles, § 58, in commenting on the decision in Shaw v. Poor, it is said:

"Acknowledgment is in truth a matter of but little consequence, and could, by statute, be properly dispensed with entirely; but so long as its requirement is retained, the courts should be consistent in their construction of the law; and this decision is not in harmony with the well-established judicial construction of the registry acts. * * * The theory on which one is charged with constructive notice of a recorded deed of which he has no actual knowledge whatever is that the law of record has been fully complied with, in matters of form as well as substance, as it is by force of the law alone that the notice arises. That the record of a deed from A. to B. should be held constructive notice of a conveyance of a separate tract or parcel by C. to B. * * * because this matter is also embraced in the instrument, does violence to the settled rules of interpretation which the courts have almost uniformly applied to the registration law."

The question under consideration seems never to have been decided in this state, although it has been held that the record of an instrument acknowledged by only one of the persons executing it is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers from the one so acknowledging. Spect v. Gregg, 51 Cal. 198; Fresno Canal, etc., Co. v. Rowell, 80 Cal. 114, 22 Pac. 53, 13 Am. St. Rep. 112.

Section 1161 of the Civil Code provides:

"Before an instrument can be recorded, * * * its execution must be acknowledged by the person executing it."

Of course, the singular includes the plural, and where there are several grantors the acknowledgment of one of them is effective only as to his own grant and not as to those of the other grantors, in the absence of special statutory provision, and the record thereof is constructive notice only of the conveyance of the one who made the acknowledgment. Webb on Record Titles, § 58. All of the decisions cited or discovered, with the exception of the early Massachusetts cases, support the rule as stated by the author. The statute of Illinois relating to chattel mortgages provides that "such instruments shall be acknowledged before a justice of the peace or the county judge where the mortgagor resides." In Snite v. Gehrke, 189 Ill. App. 382, the court held that "where a chattel mortgage is not acknowledged by one of the mortgagors, it will not be effective as against the claim of a third party." In People v. Donegan, 226 N. Y. 84, 123 N. E. 71, four persons executed a deed and all acknowledged it, but the acknowledgment of one of them was defective. The law provided that "a conveyance may be recorded on being duly acknowledged by the person executing the same." The court said: "As to the grantor whose acknowledgement was defective, the record would not be notice to subsequent purchasers." In Lancaster v. Flowers, 198 Pa. 614, 48 Atl. 896, it was held that "a deed by W. and wife of his property, acknowledged by her, but not shown by it to have been acknowledged by him, is not good as against a subsequent purchaser for value, without notice." In Hall v. Redson, 10 Mich. 21, in construing a statute requiring two witnesses to the execution of a deed to entitle it to record, the court said:

"We are all of opinion * * * that when a deed from several grantors is recorded, as to only a part of whom it is properly executed and witnessed, the record can only be evidence of the deed as to those parties by whom it has been properly executed, and whose execution of it has been duly witnessed, so as to entitle it to record had they been the only grantors named. In other words, a defective execution or attestation as to one grantor, cannot be aided by a perfect execution and attestation as to other parties. To hold otherwise would be to defeat the manifest object of the registry laws, and to open a wide door to fraud."

See, also, Bradley v. Walker (Super. Ct.) 17 N. Y. Supp. 383; Id., 138 N. Y. 291, 33 N. E. 1079; Coal Creek Min. Co. v. Heck, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 497; Duke v. Markham, 105 N. C. 131, 10 S. E. 1017, 18 Am. St. Rep. 889; and Sanders v. Pepoon, 4 Fla. 465. While the decisions bearing directly upon the question under consideration are not numerous and text-writers have generally omitted the discussion thereof, it is believed that the conclusion reached is supported by both reason and the weight of authority. In the absence of statutory provision, the record of a chattel mortgage would not constitute notice for any purpose. When the terms of the statute are complied with, the record becomes conclusive notice, often contrary to the fact. Where a mortgagee claims the benefit of such conclusive presumption which the law creates in his behalf, it is not unreasonable to hold him to a substantial compliance with the law which he invokes.

The part of the judgment appealed from is reversed, with directions to the trial court to enter judgment on the findings in favor of appellants, adjudging that the title to said automobile truck is vested in them free and clear of all claims, liens, and incumbrances in favor of the plaintiffs by reason of said chattel mortgage.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

60 Cal. App. 170

PEOPLE v. DEASES. (Cr. 646.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 16, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1923.)

Burglary ⟸42(3)—Evidence held sufficient to convict.

Evidence that accused was seen near the premises of the prosecuting witness shortly after the burglary, and his arrest in possession of the property stolen a short time after the burglary, held, in view of other circumstances, to be sufficient to sustain conviction of burglary in the second degree.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; George F. Buck, Judge.

Francisco Deases was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, of Stockton, for appellant.
U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. Defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree, and he appeals from the judgment sentencing him to the state prison. The only point made on the appeal is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding of the jury. The point is entirely without merit. The argument of appellant seems to proceed upon the theory that the possession of the stolen property a short time after the alleged commission of the offense is the only evidence of his guilt. This theory is entirely untenable. The evidence shows that a short time after the alleged commission of the offense the defendant was arrested while attempting to pawn a watch which was taken from the premises described in the information. His explanation of how he came into possession of said watch is the same as is usually given under such circumstances, namely, that he purchased it from a stranger. We may add, that there were certain circumstances connected with his explanation which stamp it as unreasonable and incredible, and no doubt the jury rejected it, as they had a right to do, as wholly unworthy of belief. In addition to the foregoing, the defendant was seen near the premises of the prosecuting witness within a short time of the commission of the said offense, and was positively identified by four witnesses who were unimpeached. There was also evidence that the defendant voluntarily stated to the deputy sheriff and jailer that he was guilty, and wanted to plead guilty and get out of jail as quick as possible; that he, the defendant, "went in this Jap's room, right on the side of Holt station and stole a watch and chain, and $2.50 in United States money, a pair of cuff buttons, that then he came to town and spent the money, and then after that he tried to sell the watch somewhere." In fact, the record shows the guilt of defendant beyond any question and there is no merit in the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

60 Cal. App. 171

PHIPPS et al. v. WESTERN PACIFIC DEVELOPMENT CO. et al. (Civ. 3971.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 18, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 15, 1923.)

1. Pleading ⟸34(4)—On demurrer complaint construed most strongly against pleader.

Under rule that, when opposed by demurrer, complaint must be construed most strongly against pleader, it may be inferred from allegation in complaint to enjoin selling of remaining lots of addition free from restrictions that plaintiffs "or" their predecessors in title purchased from, etc., that none of plaintiffs were original vendees of any of defendants.

2. Injunction ⟸118(1)—Complaint to enjoin selling lots free from restrictions held subject to demurrer for indefiniteness.

Complaint of subsequent purchasers of part of the lots of an addition to enjoin replatting of the unsold lots, so as to make them smaller and eliminate part of the streets and parkways, and selling them free from restrictions, while sufficient as to the matter of replatting, because of allegations of the streets and parkways having been included in the "laying out" of the tract, and of a map of the tract being filed and recorded, held subject to demurrer for indefiniteness as to the other relief, in not showing that the restrictions alleged to be on the printed copies of the map alleged to have been shown to purchasers were on the recorded map, or that plaintiffs in purchasing from original purchasers had notice of or relied on such restrictions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Margaret R. Phipps and others against the Western Pacific Development Company and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Robert Brennan, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Van Lee Hood and C. E. McDowell, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

JAMES, J. In this action demurrers of defendants to the complaint of the plaintiffs were sustained. Plaintiffs declined to avail themselves of the leave given to amend, and judgment was thereafter entered against them. From that judgment appeal was taken.

Under the condition of the case as it appears from the foregoing statement, the question as to the correctness of the court's ruling in sustaining the demurrers is alone presented. The demurrers presented both the general ground as to the insufficiency of the facts stated to constitute a cause of action and various particular and special grounds of uncertainty, and alleged misjoinder of parties plaintiff and misjoinder of causes of action. We think that the grounds of uncertainty are those which require particular consideration. Briefly summarized, the cause of action attempted to be set forth in the complaint was one wherein the plaintiffs, as owners of lots in a tract of land which had been subdivided by the Western Pacific Development Company, defendant, asserted the right to have preserved the lots in the dimensions originally platted, and to have left the streets and ways in the same position and width, including parkways established, as they existed at the time the tract was laid out.

[1] It was alleged that after selling two-thirds of the lots contained in the tract defendants proposed to replat the unsold portion, and by such replatting change the dimensions of such unsold lots, making them narrower in width, closing a portion of one of the streets, and eliminating some of the portions platted for parkways. Sufficient was alleged to show that all of the named defendants were so connected together as to make them responsible under the cause of action claimed. It was shown by the allegations of the complaint that the plaintiffs were the owners of lots in said tract, but it was not shown as to whether they were original purchasers or subsequent vendees. The disjunctive form of allegation was used in that connection by such allegations as "the plaintiffs or their predecessors in title purchased from," etc. Keeping in mind the rule that, when opposed by a demurrer, the complaint must be construed most strongly against the pleader, it may well be inferred that none of the plaintiffs purchased their lots from any of the defendants as the original vendees.

[2] This court recently had before it a case involving the question as to the enforceability of restrictions contained in deeds as between vendees, and in that decision the law applicable to the general subject of equitable easements was fairly stated and the leading authorities cited. See McBride et al. v. Freeman et ux., 39 Cal. App. Dec. 532.[1] What is said in that case has applicability to the controversy here, except that the parties involved in this action are subsequent vendees on one side and vendors or their privies on the other. We have no doubt at all from our examination of the law applicable to like situations that, where an owner of a tract of land subdivides the property under a general plan of improvement, records a map showing the sizes of the lots, with streets delineated thereon, also ground reserved for parks, and sells the land upon the representation of conditions as the plat exhibits them, he will be estopped from resubdividing portions which may remain in his hands so as to change the arrangement in a way detrimental to those who have purchased from him, or to their vendees. In such a case it will be held that the purchasers of lots have an equitable easement in the whole to the extent that such conditions as are mentioned shall not be varied or changed. This is a general statement which may suffer modification in the presence of other facts, such as those showing waiver of the easement right by acquiescence in changes made. But it must be shown that the recorded maps, taken in connection with the attendant circumstances, are such as to give notice of the intent of the subdividing owner to preserve the established conditions for the benefit of the lot owners. Plaintiffs in paragraph IV of their complaint allege that the Western Pacific Development Company in 1906 "caused the said tract to be laid out with winding streets, with circular and oval parks at the intersection of streets and midway of the blocks, with blocks and lots irregular in size and shape, all lots having a frontage of approximately 100 feet, and caused many of said parks to be improved and embellished with trees," etc., "and thereupon during the year 1906 caused to be prepared a map or plat of said tract, and filed and recorded the same in the office of the recorder of Los Angeles county on the 23d day of January, 1906, in Map Book 9, p. 10, the said tract as shown on said map consisting of about 356 acres divided into lots, blocks, parks, and streets, and is located," etc. It is next alleged in the same paragraph:

"That thereafter, and before the time when any of the plaintiffs or their predecessors in title purchased any lot in said tract from any of the defendants, said defendant, Western Pacific Development Company, caused to be printed and published a copy of said map or plat on which were shown the winding streets and parks and the irregular blocks and lots, as original and attractive features of said tract. The varying length of the boundaries of the several lots was shown, and the price at which each lot was to be sold was stated, and there appeared on each lot or block a letter indicating which of the restrictions printed on said map should apply; the restrictions printed thereon being as follows: 'Restrictions: A. Houses to cost not less than $10,000. House lines to be placed 100 feet back from front property line. B. Houses to cost not less than $7,500. House lines to be placed 100 feet back from front property line. C. Houses to cost not less than $5,000. House lines to be placed 75 feet back from front property line. D. Houses to cost not less than $3,500. House lines to be placed 50 feet back from front property line. On all lots except corners, houses must be placed 15 feet from side lines. On corner lots, houses must be placed at least 25 feet from side property line on said street.' About 50,000 copies of said map were printed and the same were used in soliciting each and every purchaser of lots in said tract, and a copy was shown or given to each such purchaser, until about December, 1920. A copy of said map, marked 'Exhibit A,' is hereto attached and made a part hereof."

[1] Hearing granted by Supreme Court, opinion in which is published in 215 Pac. 678.

It is then alleged that the development company caused to be prepared and used in the transfer of "all lots or parcels of land in said Brentwood Park a standard form of contract of sale and a standard form of deed containing restrictive covenants and reference to that certain plat or map mentioned in paragraph IV hereof." Whether the matter alleged to have appeared upon the printed copy of the map, including restrictive clauses, appeared upon the map alleged to have been recorded, cannot be told definitely from the allegations made. The exhibit alleged as "A" and attached to the complaint appears to have been a copy of the printed map, and not of the recorded map. As to what the "standard form of contract of sale" was cannot even be surmised, and as to what restrictive covenants were meant to be referred to, where it is alleged that there was used a "standard form of deed containing restrictive covenants," is likewise uncertain. As to the printed maps which were used in connection with the original sales of lots, it cannot be presumed that they were seen or relied upon by subsequent purchasers. We cannot presume that subsequent purchasers had any representation upon which they were warranted in relying, except the recorded map, and that map, we must conclude, showed nothing more than the parks laid out "with blocks and lots irregular in size and shape, * * * having a frontage of approximately 100 feet," as is expressed by the allegation quoted first from paragraph IV.

One of the purposes for which injunction was sought was to prevent the defendants from selling or conveying lots free from restrictions, as it is alleged they were threatening to do. The restrictions referred to were those appearing upon the printed map, which was alleged to have been delivered to original purchasers and which was used by solicitors. It appears, it is true, in the first paragraph of the complaint, that plaintiffs purchased their lots "upon the conditions, representations, and statements, and relying upon the promises, conditions, representations, and statements made by the defendants or some of them as hereinafter described." But the conditions as they were thereinafter described were not such as to show that the subsequent purchasers had any notice of or relied upon the important restrictive conditions of which they claimed the benefit. Under the allegation as to the parkways and streets having been included in the "laying out" of the tract, and the allegation following that a map of the tract was "filed and recorded" in the office of the county recorder, it may, we think, be fairly said that a cause of action was stated authorizing some of the relief sought. However, the demurrers were specific and pointed as to the matters of uncertainty which have been adverted to, and there seems to be no escape from the conclusion that the points so made were well taken. Plaintiffs might have amended and cleared up the uncertainties, but they evidently felt satisfied with the sufficiency of their complaint and allowed the judgment to go as stated.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; SHAW, J.

---

(60 Cal. App. 192)

CURRIE et al. v. TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. et al. (Civ. 3877.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 20, 1922.)

1. Deeds ⟸176 — Action to quiet title as against restrictive provisions based on acts of grantor held not improper.

An action against a corporation to quiet title to land as concerns certain restrictive provisions in a deed given by such corporation to plaintiff's grantor, which is based on the fact that the corporation has conveyed away its reversionary interest, and therefore lost its interest in the property, is not barred under the rule that a change of conditions will not sustain an action to quiet title as against restrictive provisions in a deed, since such action is based, not on the changed conditions, but on the acts of the grantor.

2. Contracts ⟸236—Contractual obligations do not disappear as a result of changed conditions, but may be modified.

Contractual obligations do not disappear as the result of a change in circumstances, though they may disappear through additional agreements and the voluntary transfer of one's contractual rights.

3. Deeds ⟸145—Restrictive provisions in deed held condition which inured to the benefit of the grantor, and not covenants inuring to the benefit of the grantor's successors in interest of adjoining lots.

Where a deed to a lot which was one of a number sold under certain restrictions by a common grantor provided it was "made and accepted upon the following conditions subsequent," and then enumerated certain restrictions as to the use and occupation of the property, and provided further "any violation of any of said conditions shall work a forfeiture of the title thereof to the said party of the first part, its successors or assigns," held that, since the deed did not disclose that the land conveyed was a part of a larger tract, the balance of which the grantor still retained, or that the restrictions were intended for the benefit of other lands, or that their benefit was to inure to and pass to other lands, and contained no designation of the land which was to be dominant tenement, such restrictive provisions are conditions subsequent, and not covenants, and inured to the benefit of the grantor only and not to him as owner of the surrounding lots.

4. Covenants ⊜79(3)—Provisions in deed for reversion to grantor upon breach of restrictive provisions, if treated as covenants, held to create easements in gross.

Provisions in a deed for reversion of the property to the grantor upon a breach of restrictive provisions relative to the occupancy of the land, if treated as covenants rather than conditions, held to create easements in gross which inured to the benefit of the grantor, and not to the owners of adjoining lots also subject to the same restrictions.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Jay E. Currie and another against the Title Insurance & Trust Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the named defendant appeals. Reversed.

Otis H. Castle, of Los Angeles, C. Elvon Musick and H. C. Allen, Jr., both of Pasadena, and Farrand & Slosson and Leonard B. Slosson, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Hibbard & Kleindienst, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. In this action the plaintiffs seek a decree quieting their title to real property. The complaint is in the ordinary form of such actions. The answer of the Title Insurance & Trust Company admits plaintiff's ownership, but alleges as a defense that the title is subject to certain conditions or restrictions contained in the deed by which the defendant corporation transferred its title to plaintiff's predecessor in interest, one W. H. Hay. The clause relied upon is in the language ordinarily used in similar transactions. It begins, "This deed is made and accepted upon the following conditions subsequent," then follows a provision against the use of a building erected thereon for certain business purposes, the erection of oil derricks, dwelling houses under a certain cost, and the occupation, etc., of the premises by any person of African descent. The paragraph concludes as follows:

"And that a violation of any of said conditions shall work a forfeiture of title thereof to the said party of the first part, its successors or assigns."

It is alleged in the answer that before plaintiffs acquired any interest or title in the property defendant corporation was the owner of all the lots in any tract of which plaintiff's property is a part; that the corporation thereafter conveyed all of said lots to divers persons; that in all of the conveyances there was inserted conditions or restrictions substantially the same as those in the deed to Hay; further, that these conditions or restrictions were placed on all of the lots "for the equal benefit of each and every lot within said tract and in pursuance of a general scheme for the development and improvement of said tract and said lots." Plaintiffs demurred generally, and the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and judgment was entered for the plaintiff.

[1, 2] At the outset the appellant challenges the right of respondent to maintain an action to quiet title, even though it be conceded for the purpose of the discussion of this phase of the case that the corporation has ceased to possess the right to relief by injunction or forfeiture. As authority for this contention we are cited to Strong v. Shatto, 45 Cal. App. 29, 187 Pac. 159. Our attention is called to the following language used in that opinion:

"But the rule does not go to the extent of permitting parties whose land is subject to the legal restraint of such limitations to bring action to quiet their title against such contractual obligations, because of changed conditions. Contractual obligations do not disappear as circumstances change. It is only the granting of equitable relief, and not the binding force of the restrictive covenant, that is affected by a change in the conditions."

The change in the instant case, if there is one, is not due to a change in conditions concerning the property, but to one in the ownership of the property; a change which is the result of contract. It is not an alteration in conditions, but one of title. While contractual obligations do not disappear as the result of a change in circumstances, such obligations may disappear through additional agreements and the voluntary transfer of one's contractual rights. The language quoted by appellant was directed toward the claim of the plaintiff in that case that, because the property had so changed that it had become more valuable for business than for residence purposes, a court of equity should quiet title of lot owners against the conditions subsequently imposed by their contracts. It was not claimed that the grantor of the property had lost his right of re-entry by reason of any act of his own, contractual or otherwise, but only because conditions with which he had nothing to do had changed. In the instant case the plaintiffs seek to have their title quieted as against the defendant corporation. On the issue presented by that defendant's answer the plaintiffs assert that the corporation has conveyed away its reversionary estate, and therefore has lost its entire interest in the property. The complaint alleges that the corporation still claims to possess its former estate, which would constitute a cloud upon plaintiffs' title. If the plaintiffs' theory of the case is correct, the defendant corporation would not only be denied relief, should it institute an action for re-entry or injunction, but in addition it has divested itself of all property right and reversionary interest in the land as completely as though such right had never been possessed, which was the fact in Werner v. Graham, 181 Cal. 174, 183 Pac. 945, in which a decree quieting title was upheld.

[3] The restrictive provisions in this deed are in the form of conditions, and not covenants. It is clearly stipulated that the deed is made and accepted upon certain express conditions subsequent which are that certain things shall not be done, and, if done, the title to the property shall revert. The grantor retained to himself and his heirs and assignees the reversion. Civ. Code, §§ 768 and 1046; Johnston v. Los Angeles, 176 Cal. 479, 168 Pac. 1047; Werner v. Graham, supra.

If these restrictive provisions were intended as covenants, easements in gross might be created as well as easements appendant. In this regard the instant case is directly within the scope of that part of the opinion in Werner v. Graham, in which the court passed upon the existence of a servitude in favor of lots which the grantor, the subdivider of the tract, still owned when he sold the lot whose title was sought to be quieted and to which lot he had given a quitclaim deed. In discussing that question the opinion reads:

"The situation in this respect is that one, the owner of a tract of land, sells a portion of it, exacting of the grantee restrictive provisions as to its use, but without a word indicating that the land conveyed is part of a larger tract, the balance of which the grantor still retains, or that the restrictions are intended for the benefit of other lands, or that their benefit is to inure to or pass with other lands, and without any description or designation of what is an essential element of any such servitude as is claimed, namely, the land which is to be the dominant tenement."

This language fits the facts shown in the record before us, both in that there is nothing in this deed indicating that the land conveyed is a part of a larger tract, the balance of which the grantor still retains, or that the restrictions are intended to benefit other lands or to pass with them, and further that no other lands are described or mentioned as the dominant tenement. It is true that in the instant case the answer avers that after conveying the lot in question the defendant conveyed all of the other lots in the tract to other persons with similar restrictions, and that these restrictions and conditions were placed thereon for the benefit of each lot in the tract and as a part of a general scheme for the improvement of the entire tract, but these allegations fall far short of stating that the deeds to the various lots contained any stipulation that the restrictions in them were a part of a general plan to improve the tract and the other lots therein and for the benefit of such tract and lots. These matters may all have been in the mind of the grantor and yet be of no avail to impose a servitude on the lots conveyed unless the grantee also joined in the plan and gave his consent to the interchange of servitudes involved. This very point is the one which was controlling in the determination of Werner v. Graham. What was there said was not obiter dicta. The Supreme Court stamped it as "the crux of the present case." In distinguishing Alderson v. Cutting, 163 Cal. 504, 126 Pac. 157, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1, from the one then under consideration, it said:

"The difference between such a case and the one at bar is that here there is no language in the instruments between the parties, that is, the deeds, which refers to a common plan of restrictions or which expresses or in any way indicates any agreement between grantor and grantee that the lot conveyed is taken subject to any such plan."

It then holds that this difference is material; that it is not the intent of the original owner that governs in such cases, but the joint intent of himself and grantees; and as an additional reason for its decision it is said that each deed must be construed as of the date it was given, and hence that mutual servitudes cannot have been created where the only restriction contained in any deed refers to the particular lot thereby granted. The opinion further points out that, even though each grantee understood that the restrictions were exacted as a part of a general scheme the result would be the same, since the deeds constitute "the final and exclusive memorials" of the understanding of the parties.

The language of the Supreme Court to which we refer was directly applicable to the issue involved. Deeds containing building restrictions had been made by the subdivider of a tract of 132 lots. Some of the instruments were executed before and some after the one to the lot whose title was sought to be quieted. The same restrictions were placed in each of the deeds. In selling the lots the grantor had represented to the purchasers that he was exacting the same restrictions from all. The respective purchasers impliedly consented thereto and relied thereon and fully appreciated the fact that the imposition of the restrictions were a part of a general plan. In view of the decisive and certain language and unanswerable reasoning used, and of the complete consideration given the subject by the Supreme Court in the Werner v. Graham Case in passing upon this exact question, we need not consider the matter further. As we interpret the authorities and apply them to the facts presented, the restrictive provisions were conditions and not covenants.

[4] But, even though we should class them as covenants, it must be held that they were intended to create easements in gross. In either event they inured to the grantor, the Title Insurance & Trust Company and its assigns, and not to the owner of certain lots of land and the various successors in interest of such lot owners.

The judgment is therefore reversed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; WORKS, J.

---

(60 Cal. App. 177)

PEOPLE v. ROGERS et al. (Cr. 640.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 18, 1922.)

1. Criminal law ⇐1178—Question of constitutionality of statute for joint trial raised below considered, though not argued, as involving fundamental right.

Constitutionality of Pen. Code, § 1098, as amended by St. 1921, p. 90, providing for persons jointly charged with an offense being jointly tried, unless the court in its discretion orders otherwise, having been raised below, as shown by the record, should be considered on appeal, though the case was not argued; as, if the Legislature transcended its authority, it would be necessary to hold that defendants had been denied a fundamental right by refusal of separate trials.

2. Criminal law ⇐622(1)—Statute for joint trial not unconstitutional.

No provision of the Constitution is violated by Pen. Code, § 1098, as amended by St. 1921, p. 90, providing for joint trial of persons jointly charged with an offense, unless the court in its discretion orders otherwise.

3. Criminal law ⇐1144(13)—In absence of complete record of testimony, conviction presumed justified.

The trial judge's certificate showing that all the testimony is not in the record, it will be presumed on appeal that there was sufficient competent evidence to justify the conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Sylvester Rogers and A. Johnson were convicted of robbery, and appeal. Affirmed.

J. S. Daly and Arthur H. McCurdy, both of Sacramento, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The appellants jointly with one William Fleming were informed against by the district attorney of Sacramento county for the crime of robbery, alleged to have been committed on the 12th day of April, 1922, in said county, upon the person of one Floyd McBride, it being alleged that said defendants by means of force and fear took from the possession and in the immediate presence of said McBride one open face watch and one watch chain of the value of $30 and of the personal property of said McBride. The appellants were jointly tried for and convicted of the crime so charged and took an appeal from the judgment of conviction.

The cause was regularly placed upon the calendar of the December, 1922, term of this court for hearing and argument, and the attorneys of record for the appellants duly notified of that fact. On the day upon which the case was called for hearing, no one appeared for the appellants, and, consequently, the cause was not orally argued before this court. No briefs had been filed in the case and the cause, upon being called for hearing, was submitted by the Attorney General upon the record. No briefs have since been filed in behalf of the appellants.

We have examined the record with care and have discovered no reason for disturbing the verdict. It appears fom the record, however, that, immediately after judgment of sentence was pronounced, one of the counsel for the appellants gave oral notice of an appeal from the judgment and at the same time stated that there was but one question involved in the case which he desired reviewed on appeal, to wit, the constitutionality of that portion of section 1098 of the Penal Code, as amended by the Legislature of 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 90), providing that "when two or more defendants are jointly charged with any public offense, whether a felony or a misdemeanor, they must be tried jointly, unless the court order special trials." In this case an application was made for separate trials of the three defendants, but, the court, after stating that there was no showing upon which the claim for separate trials could justly be made and no such showing having been offered by counsel, denied the request for separate trials, and ordered the appellants to be tried jointly.

[1, 2] Undoubtedly if it were necessary to hold that the Legislature, in clothing trial courts with the power or discretion of determining whether persons jointly charged with the same public offense should be tried separately or jointly, had transcended its constitutional authority, we would be required to hold that a fundamental right of the defendants had been denied them in the order of the court refusing them separate trials. The question is one, therefore, which should be considered, notwithstanding that the appellants have failed to argue the case before us, either orally or by way of briefs, the record, as seen, showing that the question was raised in the court below. As stated, there are no briefs on file herein and counsel have not otherwise attempted to support the suggestion that said provision of the Penal Code is in conflict with the Constitution. Our opinion is, however, that there is no provision of the Constitution with which said section conflicts. To the contrary, we think that the section vests the trial courts with a wise and proper discretion in the matter of determining whether in any case where two or more parties are jointly charged with the same offense they shall be tried jointly or separately.

A similar point was urged in the recent case of People v. Ralph J. Anderson et al., (Cal. App.) 211 Pac. 254. Speaking of section 1098 of the Penal Code, as amended by the Legislature of 1921, it was there said:

"* * * The court may, in its discretion, order separate trials of two or more defendants jointly charged with a felony, but is not bound or required to do so upon the mere request of any defendant. We presume that if there were circumstances in a particular case which would render it peculiarly proper or only just that there should be accorded to several defendants so charged separate trials, and such circumstances were in an appropriate legal way brought to the attention of the trial court, the question whether such court, in denying separate trials, had abused its discretion might be a proper subject of review. In the instant case, though, there is no showing which presents a reviewable question. The mere request of the defendants for separate trials and the order refusing the application constitute all there is of the record upon that question, and obviously, upon such a showing this court cannot say whether there was or was not an abuse of discretion in the making of the order complained of."

It is true that the question of the constitutionality of the provision referred to was not considered in the Anderson Case. But we assumed, from an examination of authorities from other jurisdictions in which the precise question was considered, that the constitutional validity of the provision could not be questioned. The following are the cases which we then examined: Commonwealth v. Borasky et al., 214 Mass. 313, 316, 101 N. E. 377, and other cases therein cited; Commonwealth v. James, 99 Mass. 438; U. S. v. Ball et al., 163 U. S. 662, 16 Sup. Ct. 1192, 41 L. Ed. 300, 303; Lee Dock et al. v. U. S., 224 Fed. 431, 140 C. C. A. 125; U. S. v. Marchant, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 480, 6 L. Ed. 700. Those cases hold that whether two or more persons charged jointly with a felony shall be tried together or separately is discretionary with the trial court. We have not examined the foregoing authorities for the purpose of determining whether therein they were dealing with statutes which, like ours, expressly vest a trial court with the power of requiring defendants jointly charged to be jointly tried. In Commonwealth v. James, 99 Mass. 438, however, the Supreme Court of that state declares: "The general rule is, that persons jointly indicted should be tried together," from which language it is to be inferred that there was no statute covering the subject and that it was therein intended to declare the general rule in the absence of statutory regulation of the matter. But in either case the decisions referred to would be directly pertinent to the proposition in hand here and would seem to negative the suggestion that the section of our Penal Code referred to is unconstitutional.

[3] The evidence presented by the record is incomplete. The certificate of the judge of the trial court shows that only certain portions of the testimony were requested by counsel for the defendants to be transcribed for the purposes of the appeal and only such portions of the testimony as were requested by counsel for the appellants to be transcribed are to be found in this record. In view of the certificate of the judge showing that all the testimony brought out at the trial is not in the record before us, the presumption is that there was sufficient competent testimony to justify the verdicts.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

190 Cal. 352

Ex parte MORCK. (Cr. 2542.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1923.)

Robbery ⊂=30—Court can impose sentence of 25 years for attempt to commit robbery.

Under Pen. Code, § 664, providing that a person convicted of an attempt may be punished by imprisonment for a term not exceeding one-half of the longest term of imprisonment prescribed for a conviction of the offense attempted, and section 671, providing that, where an offense is made punishable by imprisonment for a term not less than a specified number of years, and no limit to the duration of the imprisonment is declared, the court may sentence the offender to imprisonment for life or for any number of years not less than that prescribed, the judge has discretion to sentence one convicted of attempted robbery for any term which in his opinion would be a just and fair punishment, the maximum penalty for robbery being imprisonment for life, and a sentence to imprisonment for 25 years was valid.

In Bank.

Application by Andrew Morck for a writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the warden of San Quentin Prison to secure the release of petitioner from custody. Writ denied.

Andrew Morck, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner asks for a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that he is serving a sentence in the state prison at San Quentin for an attempt to commit robbery. He does not allege the term of his sentence, but alleges that he has already served, counting allowance for good credits, more than 9 years, and asserts "that 9 years constituted more than his half life at the time of his commitment." The case of People v. Sama (Cal. Sup.) 207 Pac. 893, decided June 16, 1922, held that, under the provisions of sections 664 and 671 of the Penal Code, the trial court had authority to sentence a defendant for an attempt to commit robbery for any term of years which in its opinion would be a just and fair punishment. It appears from a previous application of the petitioner (In re Morck, 180 Cal. 384, 181 Pac. 657) that he was sentenced for the term of 25 years. This sentence was valid. People v. Sama, supra.

The petition for the writ is denied.

WILBUR, C. J., and KERRIGAN, WASTE, MYERS, LAWLOR, LENNON, and SEAWELL, JJ., concur.

190 Cal. 353

Ex parte SPAGNOLI. (Cr. 2543.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1923.)

Criminal law ⊂=103—Jurisdiction of police court to commit woman to industrial farm may be shown by evidence dehors the record.

That the record of a police court committing a woman to the industrial farm for women does not show that she was over the age of 18 years does not entitle her to discharge on habeas corpus, as, in California, jurisdiction of an inferior court may be shown by evidence dehors the record.

In Bank.

Original application by Ernest B. D. Spagnoli for a writ of habeas corpus for Helen Von. Petition denied.

E. B. D. Spagnoli, of San Francisco, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. Petitioner applies for a writ of habeas corpus on behalf of Helen Von. The police court of San Francisco committed Helen Von to the California industrial farm for women in Sonoma county. Petitioner claims that it nowhere appears upon the records of the police court that Helen Von was over the age of 18 years and claims that in the absence of such affirmative showing she must be released, notwithstanding the fact that she may be over 18 years of age, The point is not well taken. In this state jurisdiction of an inferior court may be shown by evidence dehors the record. Jolley v. Foltz, 34 Cal. 321; Kane v. Desmond, 63 Cal. 464, 466; Ferguson v. Basin Consolidated Mines, 152 Cal. 712, 715, 93 Pac. 867; Gardella v. County of Amador, 164 Cal. 555, 561, 129 Pac. 993.

Petition denied.

WILBUR, C. J., and LAWLOR, LENNON, WASTE, SEAWELL, KERRIGAN, and MYERS, JJ., concur.

---

190 Cal. 374

JACOBUS et al. v. BRERO et al.
(S. F. 10222.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1923.)

1. Evidence ⟸265(2)—Proof of defendant's admission held to support finding.

Testimony that defendant admitted that the automobile which struck plaintiff was that driven by defendant's brother was sufficient to support a finding to that effect.

2. Appeal and error ⟸1010(1)—Finding conclusive when supported by any evidence.

The question whether or not an automobile was operated at a negligent rate of speed was one for the trial court to determine under all the circumstances, and its finding is conclusive on the Supreme Court, where there is any evidence to support it.

3. Municipal corporations ⟸819(7)—Evidence held to support finding of pedestrian's freedom from contributory negligence.

In an action for injuries to a pedestrian struck by an automobile while crossing a street, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that she was not negligent.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by Caroline Heiner against Joseph Brero and another, in which Henrietta Jacobus and another, executors, were substituted for the original plaintiff. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant Eugene Brero appeals. Affirmed.

Cooley, Crowley & Lachmund, of San Francisco, for appellant.

John D. Willard, of San Francisco, and John W. Coleberd, of South San Francisco, for respondents.

WILBUR, C. J. [1] While crossing the state highway in Redwood City, Cal., the plaintiff, Caroline Heiner, was struck and knocked down by an automobile. She brought this action against the defendants, who are brothers, to recover the damages suffered by her, and judgment was rendered against both the defendants. Eugene Brero alone appealed.

The appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the car which struck the plaintiff was one driven by his brother Joseph. It is a sufficient answer to this contention to say that a witness testified that the appellant admitted that the car which struck the plaintiff was that driven by his brother.

It is next contended that the defendant Joseph Brero was not acting as the agent of the appellant in driving the car. The claim is that the defendants were engaged in a joint enterprise of conveying a party of friends to Alma on a family picnic. The appellant owned both machines, the guests were his, and the evidence justified the conclusion that the defendant Joseph was driving the car for his brother, the appellant.

[2] It is contended that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that the defendant Joseph was negligent in the operation of his car. There was sufficient evidence, if believed by the court, to justify the conclusion that the machines were traveling at an excessive rate of speed. The question of whether or not the machine was operated at a negligent rate of speed was one for the trial court to determine under all the circumstances, and the finding of the trial court upon that subject is conclusive upon us, where there is any evidence to support it.

[3] It is contended that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law. In that regard she testified as follows:

"On the evening of the accident I went from my home to my son's house, and he was not home, and his wife and I went from there down the sidewalk on the west side of the road until I came opposite the Chilcott place, and then I crossed over. I got off the sidewalk curb to be certain that there were no automobiles coming that could hurt me, and went past, and I stood there, and I saw three lights away down south, and I thought, now I can make it, and I hurried over, as I had done often, and I watched, and I found that he came at a terrible speed, but I got over on the further part of the road so I felt now I am safe—they will go in back of me, but as I came to the part between the black part and the sidewalk they were right down on me, and I thought, 'My God!' and I took a step or two, and it hit me on my hip and threw me and knocked me out completely. That is all I know. * * * When I refer to the part of the highway not the black part, I mean the macadam where the dirt and gravel is. When I was struck I was in the middle from the black part and to the sidewalk, because when I stepped off the black part I knew they were coming, but I thought I was safe—they will go in back of me."

Under this evidence the court was justified in finding that the plaintiff was not negligent.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur; LENNON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; WASTE, J.; MYERS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

190 Cal. 369

MARTIN v. HILDEBRAND et al.
(S. F. 9802.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 31, 1923. Rehearing Denied March 1, 1923.)

1. Homestead ⊜107—Prior liens on homestead property not affected by sale on execution.

Since the proceedings authorized by Civ. Code, §§ 1245, 1246, 1248, 1249, 1251, 1252, 1254–1257, for subjecting homestead property to execution, are not made dependent on the existence or nonexistence of liens thereon, and the buyer on execution sale takes only the interest of the judgment debtor at the time of the levy, prior liens on the property are unaffected by the sale, the interest acquired by the purchaser being that of the homestead claimant freed only from the burden of the homestead.

2. Homestead ⊜128—Conveyance after levy of execution does not deprive judgment creditor of right to have property sold.

A homestead claimant's conveyance of the property after levy of execution thereon does not deprive the judgment creditor of his right under Civ. Code, § 1245 et seq., to have it sold; the transferee taking it subject to prior valid liens, of which the execution is one from the time it is levied.

3. Homestead ⊜200—Where it was admitted that homestead was worth more than amount of exemption, and could not be divided, court properly refused to appoint appraisers.

Where it was admitted, at the hearing of an application under Civ. Code, § 1245 et seq., for the appointment of appraisers of a homestead on which execution had been levied without result, that the property exceeded in value the amount of the homestead exemption, and could not be divided without material injury thereto, the court properly refused to appoint appraisers, and erred in refusing to direct the sheriff to proceed with the execution, though section 1254 provides for the determination of such facts from the appraisers' report, and in directing the issuance of, and refusing to vacate, an alias writ of execution.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Application by George J. Martin for the appointment of appraisers to value a homestead on which execution had been levied and returned unsatisfied, opposed by Ernest H. Hildebrand and others. From the orders denying the application, refusing to direct the sheriff to proceed with the execution, and directing the issuance and refusing to recall an alias writ of execution, plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part and remanded.

John H. Crabbe, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Stoney, Rouleau, Stoney & Palmer and Paul A. McCarthy, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. The plaintiff having recovered a judgment for some $800 against George H. Chiossi, one of the defendants herein, a writ of execution was issued thereon, and on September 24, 1920, levied upon real property of said defendant and his wife, consisting of a lot of land 25 feet wide by 127½ feet deep, situate in the city and county of San Francisco, upon which was a two-story and basement dwelling house. These persons had theretofore declared a homestead upon said premises, and the sheriff accordingly made his return to that effect, and that he was unable to satisfy the judgment. Within 60 days from the date of the levy the plaintiff, acting under the provisions of sections 1245 et seq. of the Civil Code, made application to the court for the appointment of persons to appraise the value of the homestead, setting up in his application the facts required by section 1246 of said Code, namely, that an execution had been levied upon the homestead, describing it, and that its value exceeded the amount of the homestead exemption, etc. This was served upon the homestead claimants. At the time appointed for the hearing thereof they made no appearance, but the defendants Hildebrand and Lettich appeared, having theretofore filed a so-called answer to said application. At the hearing they conceded the filing of said answer to be unauthorized, but requested that it be considered as an affidavit of the facts therein stated. In said answer or affidavit the allegations contained in the application for appointment of appraisers were not denied, but certain facts were alleged therein and offered as a ground for the denial of the application, the burden of which was that said Hildebrand and Lettich were now the owners of said real property, having taken a conveyance thereof since the levy of said execution; that at the time of the levy it was incumbered by liens ranking prior to the homestead, the sum of which, added to the homestead exemption, was far in excess of its value—which, however, was conceded to be superior to $5,000—so that a sale thereof could not produce anything to be applied to the satisfaction of the plaintiff's judgment. Upon those grounds they urged that the application for the appointment of appraisers should be denied. At this hearing the facts set up in the plaintiff's application were not disputed, and it was also tactily admitted, and the hearing conducted upon the theory, that the premises were of such a nature that they could not be divided and a part thereof to the value of the homestead exemption set off. Such evidence as was received was directed to the questions of the amount and priority of the liens upon the property in an effort by said defendants to sustain their contention that its sale would not bring an amount sufficient to leave anything applicable to the payment of the plaintiff's judgment.

The application before the court was, as we have seen, for the appointment of appraisers; and the sections of the Code relating to this matter and above referred to provide (Civ. Code, § 1246) the facts to be stated in the application; (section 1248) for service of notice of the hearing upon the homestead claimant; (section 1249) that upon the hearing the court may, upon proof of service and of the facts stated in the application, appoint three appraisers, who (section 1251) "must view the premises and appraise the value thereof, and if the appraised value exceeds the homestead exemption they must determine whether the land claimed can be divided without material injury"; their report (section 1252) must be in writing, and must show the appraised value, and their determination upon the matter of a division of the land; (section 1254) if from the report it appears to the judge that the land claimed exceeds in value the amount of the homestead exemption, and that it cannot be divided, he must make an order directing its sale under the execution. At such sale no bid must be received unless it exceeds the amount of the homestead exemption. Section 1255, Civ. Code. If the sale be made (section 1256) the proceeds thereof to the amount of the homestead exemption must be paid to the claimant, and the balance applied to the satisfaction of the execution, and section 1257 provides that the money paid to the claimant is entitled for six months thereafter to the same exemption against legal process and the voluntary disposition of the husband which the law gives to the homestead.

[1, 2] It will thus be seen that in the proceedings authorized by the Civil Code for subjecting homesteaded property to execution there is nothing making them dependent upon the existence or nonexistence of liens upon the property. And, since upon an execution sale the buyer takes only the interest of the judgment debtor at the time of the levy of the execution (Knight v. Fair, 9 Cal. 117; Woods v. Kellerman, 3 Cal. App. 422, 89 Pac. 358), if the property is incumbered with prior liens they would be unaffected by the sale (23 Corp. Jur. 493). Nor would the fact that subsequent to the levy of the execution the homestead claimant had conveyed the property deprive the judgment creditor of his right to have it sold, since the execution is a lien upon the property from the time it is levied (Summerfield v. Stockton Milling Co., 142 Cal. 529, 76 Pac. 243); and the transferee takes subject to prior valid liens. There is, of course, nothing in the nature of an execution sale against homesteaded property different from one against property upon which no homestead exists in so far as it affects existing liens, the only difference created by the sections of the Code cited being in the requirements, first, of certain additional steps to be taken to procure the sale; second, of a minimum bid; and, third, in the disposition of the proceeds. The interest acquired by the purchaser at such sale is the precise interest of the homestead claimant, freed, however, from the burden of the homestead. See, also, the case of White v. Horton, 154 Cal. 103, 97 Pac. 70, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 490, which was a sale of homesteaded property subject to the prior lien of a mortgage, and in which the question of the disposition of the proceeds of the sale, and how the amount bid would be affected by the existence of prior valid liens, was considered.

[3] We think it follows that, under the circumstances appearing upon the hearing of the application for the appointment of appraisers, it would have been the duty of the court to grant said application, except that the facts which it would have been the function of the appraisers to find and report upon were, as we have seen, admitted at such hearing, thus rendering it an idle act to require a report to be made.

It appearing, then, to the court that the real property exceeded in value the amount of the homestead exemption, and that it could not be divided without material injury, it was its duty to make an order directing its sale under the execution. Civ. Code, § 1254.

During the pendency of the proceedings under consideration the plaintiff applied to the court for an order directing the sheriff to proceed with the execution, basing his application upon the ground that the homestead had been abandoned. This application was considered in connection with that for the appointment of appraisers, and resulted in the denial of both applications, but the court on December 31, 1920, did direct that an alias writ of execution should issue. The plaintiff subsequently moved to recall this alias writ, and to return to the sheriff the writ of September 24 for further proceedings thereunder. This, also, the court refused to do. It is from these orders that the plaintiff has appealed.

In the light of what we have said we think it follows that the court should have granted the plaintiff's motion for an order directing the sheriff to proceed with the sale of the premises, for at the time it was made the necessity for the appointment of appraisers and the making of their report no longer existed, and the plaintiff was entitled to have the property sold; said sale to be made subject to whatever incumbrances were upon the premises at the time of the levy of the writ of September 24, 1920, and the sheriff directed to accept no bid unless it exceeded the sum of $5,000, and that, of the amount so bid, $5,000 should be paid to the grantees of the homestead claimants, the surplus, if any, to be applied pro tanto in satisfaction of the plaintiff's judgment, and the balance in excess thereof, if any, to said grantees of the homestead claimants. As to the order that an alias writ of execution should issue, the plaintiff had not moved for such an order, and it was not the order to which he was entitled. The court therefore erred in its making, as also in its subsequent order refusing to vacate it. Both said orders are therefore reversed, except with respect to that part of the first of them refusing to appoint appraisers, and the cause is remanded to the trial court for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; MYERS, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.

---

190 Cal. 376

Ex parte McLAIN. (Cr. 2513.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 1, 1923.)

1. Constitutional law ⊂⊃62—Power of Legislature to enact laws cannot be delegated to subordinate body.

The power conferred upon the Legislature to make laws cannot be delegated by it to the highway commission.

2. Bridges ⊂⊃30—Arrest for violation of highway commission's declaration as to rate of speed over bridge held unlawful.

An arrest and conviction for violation of the California highway commission's declaration of the rate of speed that a motor vehicle shall travel over a bridge, pursuant to Motor Vehicle Act, § 22(a), as amended by St. 1919, p. 220, § 13, is unlawful, because, viewed as an attempt to legislate, the declaration is without authority and void, and, if accepted as a rule or regulation, the statute has fixed no penalty for its violation.

3. Constitutional law ⊂⊃62—Legislature may delegate determination of facts upon which its own action depends.

For the proper enforcement of its laws, the Legislature may delegate a power to an officer, board, or commission, to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend, but in such cases the distinction between the legislative and administrative function must be recognized and enforced.

In Bank.

Application for habeas corpus by Fred F. McLain, directed to the Sheriff of Los Angeles County, for release from custody. Petitioner discharged.

David R. Faries, J. Allen Davis, and William B. Gilroy, all of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Thos. Lee Woolwine, Dist. Atty., of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, J. This is an application for release on a writ of habeas corpus. It appears from the petition that the petitioner was convicted and ordered imprisoned for the alleged violation of the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act.

The essential facts are that the petitioner operated and drove an automobile over and upon a certain bridge, a portion of Colorado street, a public highway in the city of Eagle Rock, and between certain signs or limit markers erected and standing at each extremity thereof, at a rate of speed of 28 miles per hour, in violation of an order of the California highway commission, fixing the maximum rate of speed of vehicles traveling over said bridge and between the limit markers at 15 miles per hour. For this offense he was arrested, found guilty, and sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail.

It appears that, prior to the arrest and conviction of the petitioner, the California highway commission, by virtue of authority assumed by it under the provisions of section 22 (a) of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, pp. 220, 221) established a speed limit of 15 miles per hour for all vehicles traveling over this particular bridge, and caused to be erected signs marking the location and limits of the highway to which such rate of speed applied. By section 1 (4) of the Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, p. 193), for the purposes of the act, the word "highway" is made to include any bridge intended or used by the general public for the passage of vehicles. Section 22 (a), above referred to, provides, in substance, that any person operating or driving an automobile on the public highways shall operate and drive the same in a careful and prudent manner and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having regard to the traffic and use of the highway; provided, that it shall be unlawful to operate or drive at a rate of speed in excess of 35 miles an hour, with a limitation of speed in territory closely built up and in the business district of incorporated cities, and when approaching grade crossings and intersecting highways. The section then provides:

"That the maximum rate of speed over any bridge, dam, trestle, culvert, causeway or viaduct as well as the maximum rate of speed over any state highway or portion of state highway may be established by the state highway commission at less than the rate established by law, when in the judgment of said commission the safety of persons using the highway or the protection of the highway shall be promoted thereby, but whenever any such different rate of speed is so established by said commission, the commission shall cause to be erected suitable signs to mark the location and limits of the highway to which said different rate of speed shall apply, and such signs shall be placed at a distance of not less than one hundred feet or at a greater distance than one hundred fifty feet from the highway or portion of highway or from the approaches of any bridge, dam, trestle, culvert, causeway or viaduct with respect to which such different rate of speed may be so established. In the case of a bridge, dam, trestle, culvert, causeway or viaduct, such maximum rate of speed so established by said commission shall not be less than ten miles an hour, and in the case of any other highway or portion of highway, such maximum rate of speed so established shall not be less than fifteen miles an hour."

The statute provides (section 32 [a] Stats. 1917, p. 410) that any person violating any of its provisions (the italics are ours) shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be punished in the manner therein provided. Nothing is said, in express terms or by necessary implication, that would make a violation of any of the regulations or rules of the highway commission a violation of the act, or punishable as such.

[1, 2] The conviction and imprisonment of the petitioner rest upon the validity of the above-quoted portion of section 22 (a). His contention is that there is here an attempted unconstitutional delegation of power by the Legislature to the highway commission. It is settled, of course, beyond controversy, that the power conferred upon the Legislature to make laws cannot be delegated by it to any subordinate body. If the power to be exercised by the highway commission under the provisions of the above section amounts to a lawmaking power, as contended for by the petitioner, it follows that such provision must be unconstitutional. Beatty, C. J., in Ford v. Harbor Commissioners, 81 Cal. 19, 37, 22 Pac. 278. The Legislature cannot delegate its power to make laws. Harbor Com'rs v. Redwood Co., 88 Cal. 491, 494, 26 Pac. 375, 22 Am. St. Rep. 321; Locke's Appeal, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716; Field v. Clark, 143 U. S. 649, 694, 12 Sup. Ct. 495, 36 L. Ed. 294. The principle applies to a case where it is sought substantially to prescribe a criminal offense by the regulation of a department. It is a principle of criminal law that an offense which may be the subject of criminal procedure is an act committed, or omitted, "in violation of public law, either forbidding or commanding it." 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 279; U. S. v. Eaton, 144 U. S. 677, 687, 12 Sup. Ct. 764, 36 L. Ed. 591; section 15, Pen. Code. The act nowhere declares that it shall be unlawful to drive or operate an automobile over a bridge, or other designated portion of the highway, at a rate of speed greater than that fixed by the highway commission, but it seemingly attempts to confer upon the commission the power to so declare. Ex parte Cox, 63 Cal. 21. In that case the Legislature delegated to the board of viticultural commissioners the power to make certain rules in the nature of quarantine, to prevent the importation of diseased vines. The act expressly provided that any willful violation of such rules should constitute a misdemeanor. Cox was discharged upon habeas corpus by the court, he having been convicted of violating certain of the rules and regulations, the opinion holding that the Legislature had no authority to confer upon the board the power to declare what acts should constitute a misdemeanor.

There is very little difference, if any, in effect between the portion of the vehicle act here under attack and the section of the act to provide for the proper sanitary condition of factories and workshops (Stats. 1889, p. 3) which this court had under consideration in Schaezlein v. Cabaniss, 135 Cal. 466, 67 Pac. 755, 56 L. R. A. 733, 87 Am. St. Rep. 122, and which laid down certain definite regulations relating to sanitation, ventilation, and working conditions in factories and workshops. It further provided, in section 4, that if, in such places, any process or work was carried on by which dust or injurious gases were generated that were liable to be inhaled by the persons employed therein, and it appeared to the commissioner of the bureau of labor statistics that such inhalation could, to a great extent, be prevented by the use of some mechanical contrivance, the commissioner should direct that such contrivance should be provided and used. The concluding section provided a penalty for "violating any of the provisions of the act." Schaezlein and others were convicted of having unlawfully refused and neglected, after notice, to provide and use a suction device in a metal polishing shop, within a reasonable time after having been directed by the commissioner so to do. The ultimate question there presented was the constitutionality of section 4 of the act just quoted. The court said (135 Cal. at page 471, 67 Pac. 757, 56 L. R. A. 733, 87 Am. St. Rep. 122):

"The manifest objection to this law is that upon the commissioner has been imposed not the duty to enforce a law of the Legislature, but the power to make a law for the individual and to enforce such rules of conduct as he may prescribe. It is thus arbitrary, special legislation, and violative of the Constitution."

We are unable to draw a distinction between the effect of that decision on the situation there considered and its application to the facts here.

The statute itself distinguishes between the rates of speed prescribed by the Legislature and those to be determined by the commission in such way as to be practically determinative of the question we are considering. It declares that the maximum rate of speed over bridges or over any portion of the highway—

"may be established by the state highway commission at less than the rate established by law." (The italics are ours.)

Here seems to be a plain recognition by the Legislature that the rates of speed to be determined by the commission are not to have the effect of law. There are, therefore, two sufficient reasons why the detention of the petitioner is unlawful: Viewed as an attempt to legislate concerning the rate of speed for vehicles over the bridge, as part of the highway, the declaration of the commission was without authority, and void; accepted as a rule or regulation for vehicles using the bridge, the statute has fixed no penalty for its violation.

[3] For the proper enforcement of its laws, the Legislature may delegate a power to an officer, board, or commission to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes, or intends to make, its own action depend. Field v. Clark, supra; U. S. v. Grimaud, 220 U. S. 506, 520, 31 Sup. Ct. 480, 55 L. Ed. 563; Harbor Com'rs v. Redwood Co., supra. But in such cases, the distinction between the legislative and administrative function must be recognized and enforced.

"The distinction is fundamental. Where the charge is of crime, it must have clear legislative basis." U. S. v. George, 228 U. S. 14, 22, 33 Sup. Ct. 412, 415, 57 L. Ed. 712.

The petitioner is ordered discharged.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; MYERS, J.; LENNON, J.; SEAWELL, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

190 Cal. 354

In re CLARK'S ESTATE. (L. A. 7268.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1923. Rehearing Denied Feb. 26, 1923.)

1. Executors and administrators ⟸315(5)—Order of distribution is proceeding in rem.

An order of final distribution of a decedent's estate is in rem.

2. Executors and administrators ⟸314(12)—Heirs entitled to appeal from order for distribution of estate in which intestate interested, when administrator refuses.

Where an administrator refuses to appeal from an order distributing an estate in which his intestate is interested, the heirs may maintain the appeal, especially in view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 938, 1665, 1668, 1713–1715, under which successors in interest may petition for distribution, persons interested may appear and contest a petition for distribution, and parties aggrieved may appeal.

3. Appeal and error ⟸162(3)—Appeal from order of distribution not precluded by accepting amount awarded to which appellants entitled in any event.

Where persons appealing from a decree distributing a decedent's estate were in any event entitled to one-half of the estate as awarded them by the decree, they were not precluded from maintaining an appeal for the purpose of establishing a greater claim by accepting the amount awarded them.

4. Judgment ⟸688—Suit by husband's administrator held conclusive against sister, claiming right to inherit from wife.

A judgment for the defendant, in suit by husband's administrator against wife's administrator to recover property, involving the sole issue whether the property was the separate property of the husband or of the wife at the time of the husband's death, was conclusive against the husband's sister, asserting a right to inherit from the wife, under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, on the theory that the property came to the wife by descent from the husband, as her right depended on the property having been the separate property of the husband at the date of his death.

5. Judgment ⟸677—Concludes persons claiming under title represented by defeated party.

A judgment concludes, not only the adverse party, but all those claiming under the title which he represented.

6. Judgment ⟸714(1)—Conclusive as to fact thereby affirmed, when again in issue, though incidentally.

A judgment or decree necessarily affirming the existence of any fact is conclusive on the parties or their privies whenever the existence of that fact is again in issue between them, not only when the subject-matter is the same, but when the point comes incidentally in question in relation to a different matter.

7. Judgment ⟸636—Probate court concluded by judgment of other court of competent jurisdiction adjudicating title, when that was the only evidence offered.

Under Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 8, providing that property which came to an intestate from his or her deceased spouse by descent, devise, or bequest shall descend to certain relatives of the deceased spouse, the probate court, in necessarily determining the source of the title to the property, is concluded by a judgment obtained in a court having jurisdiction to litigate the title, and adjudging that the property was the separate property of the intestate prior to the death of the deceased spouse, where no other evidence than the judgment roll was offered or received.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased. From a decree of distribution, certain of the parties appeal. Reversed.

Geo. K. Ford, of San Francisco, and Arthur Wright, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Edward L. Rives, James S. Bennett, and Frank Bryson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. Margaret T. Clark, a resident of Los Angeles county, died intestate on September 9, 1914, leaving surviving her an aunt, Arvilla Armstrong Grover, a sister of said Margaret T. Clark's mother, and also Jessie Clark Newton, a sister of said Margaret T. Clark's deceased husband. Frank Bryson, public administrator, is the duly qualified and acting administrator of the estate of the deceased, which admittedly consisted entirely of personal property derived from Frank E. Clark, husband of the deceased, Margaret T. Clark, and which came to him by inheritance from the estate of his mother. Subsequent to the death of Margaret T. Clark, her aunt, Arvilla Armstrong Grover, died, leaving as her heirs nine children and five grandchildren, the appellants herein, all of whom reside outside of the state. On the 20th day of October, 1921, Frank Bryson, public administrator, was appointed, and ever since has been the duly qualified and acting administrator of the estate of said Arvilla Armstrong Grover, deceased.

A petition for distribution was filed by Bryson, as administrator of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, alleging that "the next of kin and heirs at law of said deceased are unknown," and praying that said estate be distributed "to the persons entitled thereto." The children and grandchildren of Arvilla Armstrong Grover, deceased, the appellants herein, as the successors in interest of said Arvilla Armstrong Grover, deceased, presented their petition for distribution to them of the entire estate of said Margaret T. Clark, deceased, upon the ground that said Arvilla Armstrong Grover was the only heir at law of said Margaret T. Clark, deceased.

The petition of appellants that all of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, be distributed to them, was opposed by Jessie Clark Newton upon the ground that the property in controversy, at the time of the death of Frank E. Clark, was his separate property, and, having come to said Margaret T. Clark by descent, she, Jessie Clark Newton, as sister of said Frank E. Clark, deceased, pursuant to the provisions of the concluding clause of subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, was the statutory heir of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, and therefore was entitled to have distributed to her that portion of the said estate. The petition of Jessie Clark Newton was in turn opposed by the heirs of Arvilla Armstrong Grover, deceased, upon the ground that the property in controversy at the time of the death of Frank E. Clark and prior thereto was the separate property of Margaret T. Clark.

Prior to distribution herein, the Pasadena Trust & Savings Bank was appointed and qualified as administrator of the estate of Frank E. Clark, deceased, and as such administrator commenced an action against Bryson, as administrator of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, to recover from Bryson the possession of all of the property of said last-mentioned estate upon the ground that at the time of the death of Frank E. Clark said property was his separate property and that said trust and savings bank, as the administrator of his estate, was entitled to its possession. The court in that action gave judgment in favor of the administrator of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, against the administrator of the estate of Frank E. Clark, deceased. The judgment was made and based upon findings "that at the time of her death said property was the separate property of said Margaret T. Clark," and that she "long prior to the death of Frank E. Clark, became the owner, in possession of, and entitled to the possession of said property." That judgment was, upon appeal, affirmed. At this point it should be noted that the opposition and answer of the appellants herein to the petition of the respondent, Jessie Clark Newton, pleaded "that said Jessie Clark Newton was, at the the time of the filing of her said petition for distribution herein, since has been and is now estopped" by said above-mentioned judgment from claiming said or any property of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased.

Upon the hearing of the probate proceeding for distribution in the court below, the judgment roll in the action just above referred to was offered by appellants and received in evidence over the objection of respondent, Jessie Clark Newton, that it was "incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial and did not constitute an estoppel between any of the parties to the present proceedings."

The court below, sitting in probate, having heard the evidence adduced in response to the issues raised by the petitions and counter-petitions for distribution, found among other things:

"That said judgment is not binding upon this court sitting in probate and the said Jessie Clark Newton is not estopped by said judgment to claim said estate as heir at law of the said Margaret T. Clark, deceased."

The court further found that at the time of the death of Frank E. Clark, his widow, Margaret T. Clark, succeeded to an equal one-half of the property and estate owned by said Frank E. Clark at the time of his death, and that as to the other one-half of the estate of Frank E. Clark, any right to recover possession thereof from the administrator of the estate of Margaret T. Clark had been lost by laches and barred by the statute of limitations. With these findings as a basis the court further found that Jessie Clark Newton, upon the death of Margaret T. Clark, by virtue of and pursuant to the concluding clause of subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code, succeeded to the one-half of the estate of said Frank E. Clark, found to have been succeeded to by said Margaret T. Clark. This was virtually a finding that the property in question was the separate property of Frank E. Clark at the time of his death. It was accordingly decreed that one-half of the proceeds of the property and estate of Margaret T. Clark be distributed to Jessie Clark Newton and that the other one-half be distributed to the administrator of the estate of Arvilla Armstrong Grover. The administrator of the estate of Arvilla Armstrong Grover accepted the portion of the estate of Margaret T. Clark so distributed to him and subsequently, upon a petition for distribution in that estate, that portion was distributed to appellants.

The appeal now before us is from that part of the decree of final distribution made in the matter of the estate of said Margaret T. Clark, deceased, awarding to Jessie Clark Newton, respondent herein, "the sum of $11,245.41, being the proceeds of the property and estate of Margaret T. Clark, received by her by succession from her said husband, Frank E. Clark, together with the interest, income and other rents, issues and profits thereof, and amounting to one-half of the estate in the possession of said administrator at the time of the settlement of his final account herein."

It is insisted at the threshold that the appeal should be dismissed and a motion to dismiss has been made, based upon the following grounds: (1) That the heirs of Arvilla Armstrong Grover have no standing to maintain the present appeal, and (2) that said heirs are estopped to prosecute this appeal by reason of the fact that they accepted that portion of the estate awarded to them by the decree of distribution in question.

[1, 2] Pursuant to the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure "successors in interest" are authorized to petition for distribution and "persons interested" are authorized to "appear and contest" the petition of another for distribution and "parties aggrieved" are authorized to appeal. Sections 1665, 1668, 1713 to 1715, 938, Code Civ. Proc. Nevertheless it is insisted by respondent that inasmuch as the exclusive control of actions for the collection of money due an intestate is in the administrator of the estate, this appeal should have been prosecuted by Frank Bryson, as administrator of the estate of Arvilla Armstrong Grover, deceased, in behalf of her heirs, and that the heirs themselves have no standing to maintain this appeal. This appeal, however, is not a civil action brought by the heirs for the collection of money due an intestate, but an appeal from an order of final distribution, which is a proceeding in rem. Hill v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 359, 48 Pac. 323. But if this had been an action to recover personal property rather than a proceeding for the distribution of the estate of deceased, respondent's contention that the administrator alone could prosecute the appeal cannot be sustained, for the reason that it is an admitted fact in the instant case that the administrator has declined to appeal. The general rule that the heir may not, in his individual capacity, bring an action to collect debts due the estate applies only in the absence of special circumstances. And the refusal of the administrator in the instant case to prosecute the appeal is such a circumstance. Holland v. McCarthy, 177 Cal. 507, 171 Pac. 421. Furthermore, if this had been a civil action, the heirs could by proper allegation and by making the administrator a defendant by reason of his refusal to act or join with the heirs, have maintained the action. Hall v. Southern Pac. Co., 40 Cal. App. 39, 42, 180 Pac. 20. There is no good reason, therefore, why they should not be permitted here, after his refusal to act, to maintain this appeal.

[3] Respondent's second ground for dismissal is also without merit. The appellants here, in any event, were entitled to the one-half of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, distributed to the administrator of the estate of Arvilla Armstrong Grover, and subsequently distributed to them in that estate. It is well settled that an appellant is not precluded from maintaining an appeal for the purpose of establishing a greater claim where it appears that he is entitled to that which he has accepted but is claiming something more. Estate of Ayers, 175 Cal. 187, 165 Pac. 528.

The motion to dismiss is therefore denied.

[4] In support of the appeal it is the contention of appellants herein that the judgment in the action between the administrator of the estate of Frank E. Clark, deceased, and the administrator of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, which adjudged the title to the property here in controversy to be in Margaret T. Clark, as her separate property, at the time of the death of her husband, was binding upon Jessie Clark Newton, represented as she was as heir of Frank E. Clark in that proceeding, by the administrator of the estate of her brother.

[5] This contention, we think, must be sustained. The pleadings and findings of the court in that action between the respective administrators of the estates of Frank E. Clark, deceased, and Margaret T. Clark, deceased, show unmistakably that the sole and only issue raised by the pleadings and adjudicated in the action was whether or not the property in controversy here was the separate property of the husband, Frank E. Clark, at the time of his death, or had become, prior thereto, the separate property of his wife, Margaret T. Clark. In other words, the issue there was, in whom was the title and ownership of the property in controversy at the time of the death of Frank E. Clark, and the judgment was that the property at the time of the death of Frank E. Clark was the separate property of Margaret T. Clark, since deceased. In that action the judgment was binding not only upon the administrator who prosecuted the action, but upon the heirs as well of the intestate, Frank E. Clark, deceased. The administrator represented the title which the deceased, Frank E. Clark, had at the time of his death. The claimed titles to the property in dispute in the action in question were, of course, hostile to one another and had been directly opposed before the court rendering the judgment, in which the superiority of one title over the other was ascertained and fixed by the judgment. And whatever the rule may be in other jurisdictions, it is the rule in this state that the judgment concludes not only the adverse party but also all those claiming under the title which he represented. Cunningham v. Ashley, 45 Cal. 485; De Halpin v. Oxarart, 58 Cal. 101; Bayly v. Muehe, 65 Cal. 345, 3 Pac. 467, 4 Pac. 202, 486; Spotts v. Hanley, 85 Cal. 155, 24 Pac. 738; Collins v. Scott, 100 Cal. 446, 34 Pac. 1085; Finger v. McCaughey, 119 Cal. 59, 51 Pac. 13; Dickey v. Gibson, 121 Cal. 276, 53 Pac. 704; McCaughey v. Lyall, 152 Cal. 615, 93 Pac. 681; Meeks v. Olpherts, 100 U. S. 564, 25 L. Ed. 735; Lloyd v. Ball (D. C.) 77 Fed. 365.

[6] That judgment is binding, not only in proceedings upon the same, but also upon a different cause of action in so far as it settles and determines questions of fact. 23 Cyc. 1288–1290. It is well settled that a judgment or decree necessarily affirming the existence of any fact is conclusive upon the parties or their privies whenever the existence of that fact is again in issue between them, not only when the subject-matter is the same, but when the point comes incidentally in question in relation to a different matter in the same or any other court. Freeman on Judgments, §§ 249 and 253; Lamb v. Wahlenmaier, 144 Cal. 91, 77 Pac. 765, 103 Am. St. Rep. 66; Reed v. Cross, 116 Cal. 473, 484, 48 Pac. 491; Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. v. Nelson, 220 Fed. 53, 135 C. C. A. 621. That is to say, "a matter of fact once adjudicated by a court of competent jurisdiction, concurrent or exclusive, may be relied upon as an estoppel in any subsequent collateral suit in the same or any other court, at law, in chancery, in probate or in admiralty, when either party, or the privies of either party, allege anything inconsistent with it, and this too whether the subsequent suit is upon the same or a different cause of action. The facts decided in the first suit cannot be disputed." Bigelow on Estoppel, pp. 110, 111, 112; Rauer v. Rynd, 27 Cal. App. 556, 150 Pac. 780.

In the application of the doctrine of res judicata there is, sometimes, a distinction to be made concerning the effect of the judgment in a former action. Thus: (1) A former judgment may be conclusive evidence that no cause of action exists. That is to say, it may be offered, not as estoppel to proof of any fact, but as proof of the nonexistence of a cause of action at all. Or (2) treated from the standpoint of its use as a piece of evidence, it may be produced when specifically pleaded as an estoppel, as was done in the instant case, as evidence of some material fact in the cause of action on trial, the truth of which both parties are estopped from denying. In the latter case the judgment gives an indefinite life and irrebuttable probative force to any fact found by the judgment to be true. The latter is the effect produced when the controversy is again raised in another suit upon a different cause of action. It is the latter use which was pleaded for the judgment in question by appellants here.

The presentation of a petition for distribution to herself as statutory heir of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, by Jessie Clark Newton, was tantamount to the institution of a proceeding which necessarily had for one of its purposes the relitigation of the ownership of the property in controversy here, title to which had been previously litigated and adjudged adversely to her. Section 1386 of the Civil Code, and particularly the concluding clause of subdivision 8, pursuant to the provisions of which Jessie Clark Newton claims to be entitled to share in the distribution of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, reads as follows:

"If the estate, or any portion thereof, was the separate property of such deceased spouse, while living, and came to such decedent from such spouse by descent, devise, or bequest, such property goes in equal shares to the children of such spouse and to the descendants of any deceased child by right of representation, and if none, then to the father and mother of such spouse, in equal shares, or to the survivor of them if either be dead, or if both be dead, then in equal shares to the brothers and sisters of such spouse and to the descendants of any deceased brother or sister by right of representation."

Heirship depends upon certain facts. Here the relationship of heir of Jessie Clark Newton to Margaret T. Clark, deceased, under the provisions of the Code section just above quoted, depends upon two facts: (1) The fact of the relationship of sister of Jessie Clark Newton to Frank E. Clark, deceased, which is admitted; and (2) the fact of the ownership of the property by Frank E. Clark, deceased, at the time of his death and the taking of that property by his wife by descent.

If, as found by the court sitting in probate, the property in controversy was the separate property of Frank E. Clark, deceased, at the time of his death, and had come to his wife, Margaret T. Clark, deceased, by succession, then, of course, under the provisions of the above-quoted Code section, Jessie Clark Newton was entitled to that portion so coming to the wife by succession. On the other hand, if the property in controversy was not the separate property of Frank E. Clark, deceased, at the time of his death, Jessie Clark Newton had no foundation for her claim as an heir of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, for if at the time of her death the property was the separate property of Margaret T. Clark and had not come to her by descent from her deceased husband, her aunt, Arvilla Armstrong Grover, was her sole heir. Civ. Code, § 1386, subd. 5. Therefore, the primary question presented to the probate court for decision upon the issues raised by Jessie Clark Newton's opposition to the petition for distribution was the question of whether or not the property in controversy was the separate property of Frank E. Clark, deceased, at the time of his death. This was, as before pointed out, the sole question at issue in the previous action brought by the administrator of the estate of Frank E. Clark, deceased, for the recovery of the property of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, from the administrator thereof.

[7] But it is insisted by respondents that the jurisdiction of the probate court to determine the heirs and to distribute the estate to them cannot be controlled by an adjudication of a co-ordinate court having neither controlling nor revisory jurisdiction in probate matters. Concededly the probate court had jurisdiction for the purpose of distribution to determine who were the heirs of Margaret T. Clark, deceased. But obviously before Jessie Clark Newton could be determined to be a statutory heir under the provisions of subdivision 8 of section 1386 of the Civil Code and distribution accordingly awarded to her, it was necessary for the probate court to ascertain, preliminarily and incidentally, from the evidence adduced in response to the issues raised by the petitions and counter petitions, the source of the title to the property sought to be distributed and thereby determine the character of the estate of which Margaret T. Clark, deceased, died possessed. That is to say, to determine whether or not such property came to her by descent from her husband and was his separate property at the time of his death. This, not for the purpose of finally adjudicating a disputed title, for this would be in excess of the jurisdiction of the probate court (Estate of Rathgeb, 125 Cal. 302, 57 Pac. 1010), but merely for the purpose of determining whether the property in question was of the character claimed for it by Jessie Clark Newton in support of her petition for distribution of said property to her as the statutory heir of Margaret T. Clark, deceased. The only evidence offered and received upon the hearing of the proceeding for distribution consisted of the judgment roll in the action wherein the title to the property in question was finally adjudicated to be in Margaret T Clark, as her separate property at the time of the death of her husband, and having been obtained in a forum which had jurisdiction to litigate said title, was therefore conclusive as a matter of evidence upon the probate court and should have compelled a finding that Jessie Clark Newton was not entitled to the distribution which she prayed for.

It is argued, however, by respondent that inasmuch as Jessie Clark Newton claims, not as heir of Frank E. Clark, deceased, but as statutory heir of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, that she is not in privity with the adverse party in the former proceeding and that the judgment therein is not res judicata as to her. While, theoretically, it may be that the parties in the present suit are not, by reason of the fact that they are all claiming as heirs of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, adverse parties in the strict sense, nevertheless under the circumstances of this particular case it cannot be denied that, as a practical matter of fact, the same adverse rights which were directly and adversely opposed in the former suit are the same as are adversely opposed in the proceeding here. The former action, brought by the administrator of the estate of Frank E. Clark, deceased, was brought by the administrator for the benefit of the heir of Frank E. Clark, Jessie Clark Newton, respondent herein. And in that action he was opposed by the administrator of the estate of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, not only for the benefit of Margaret T. Clark, deceased, but for the benefit of the ultimate heirs of Margaret T. Clark, appellants herein. Bowman v. Parks, 166 Iowa, 403, 147 N. W. 850.

Had the probate court found in accordance with the only evidence adduced upon the hearing for distribution, it must necessarily have found that the property did not come to Margaret T. Clark by descent from her husband, in which event Jessie Clark Newton, the respondent herein, was not entitled to participate in the distribution of the estate. That part of the decree appealed from must therefore be reversed, and it is so ordered.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; MYERS, J.; WASTE, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LAWLOR, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

60 Cal. App. 163

PEOPLE v. ROSS. (Cr. 914.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 16, 1922.)

1. Weapons ⟸17(4)—Evidence held sufficient to support verdict of guilty for carrying concealed weapon.

Evidence in prosecution for carrying a concealed weapon by accused previously convicted of a felony, contrary to St. 1917, p. 221, § 3, held sufficient to warrant jury in concluding that accused carried a concealed pistol on his person.

2. Weapons ⟸17(2) — Though information must allege lack of license to carry concealed weapon, burden on accused to prove falsity of averment.

Though the clause of the statute (St. 1917, p. 221, § 3) which exempts from its penal provisions those persons who have been licensed to carry firearms is so incorporated into and made a substantial part of the definition of the offense of carrying a concealed weapon that it is necessary to allege in an information that accused was without a license to carry a weapon, and in pursuance of the statute the information contained an allegation that accused was without a license to carry the concealed weapon, such averment presented a negative, the burden of proving which was not on the prosecution, but on the defendant, since the truth or falsity of the averment lay more immediately within the knowledge of the accused himself.

3. Criminal law ⟸330—When burden of proving facts within knowledge of defendant rests on him.

Where the negative of issue does not permit of direct proof, or where the facts come more immediately within the knowledge of the defendant, the onus probandi rests on him.

4. Weapons ⟸17(2)—Burden on accused to show license to carry.

Since the burden of proving that accused had a license to carry a concealed weapon was on himself, it was immaterial, as against the contention of accused that the evidence to prove lack of license was insufficient, that the prosecution, when a city marshal testified he did not grant a license to accused, did not show that the city, of which the marshal was an officer, did not belong to that class of municipalities having a board of police commissioners, or a chief of police, or other head of the police department, by whom a license might have been issued.

5. Criminal law ⟸656(3)—Court's remarks held not error.

Remarks made by the court in a prosecution for carrying a concealed weapon, when the state objected to certain testimony, to the effect: "Well, allow him to testify. The very best way is to let it in, because it occurred right there simultaneously, at one time. The jury are not going to misunderstand the instructions of the court; they know what matters—that it is made a crime for him to carry a weapon of that character, if he has been convicted of a felony"—held not objectionable, as giving the jury to understand that the law makes it an offense simply to carry a weapon, concealed or unconcealed, where a moment previously the court properly used the word "concealed weapon," from which the jury must have understood the reference was to a "concealed weapon," and the court also carefully and accurately defined the offense described in the statute.

6. Criminal law ⟸1129(3)—Assignment of errors held not sufficiently specific.

Where the court charged the jury with respect to the presumption of innocence, assignments of error as to the court's refusal to give appellant's requested instruction will not be considered, where they are not set out in appellant's brief, but are referred to therein only as being on a certain page in the clerk's transcript; the appellate court being entitled to a more specific and illuminating assignment.

7. Criminal law ⟸1036(1)—Objection to evidence, not raised in trial court, may be ignored by appellate court.

The appellate court is justified in ignoring an objection that the court, contrary to Pen. Code, § 1025, permitted evidence of defendant's prior conviction to be placed before the jury, when such objection was not made in the trial court.

8. Criminal law ⟸300, 1202(4)—Question of previous conviction of felony held an issue under plea of not guilty, and was a jury question.

Where accused at time of arraignment, after being informed by the court of his legal rights, waived the reading of the information charging him with the offense of carrying a concealed weapon, and that he was previously convicted of a felony, and, upon being given a copy thereof, pleaded "not guilty as charged in the information," his plea put in issue the charge of the previous conviction as well as the principal offense, as provided in Pen. Code, § 1019, and the question whether defendant had been previously convicted was properly submitted to the jury, under section 1025.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Charles Ross was convicted of carrying a concealed weapon, and appeals. Affirmed.

D. M. Edwards, of Visalia, Ernest Klette, of Fresno, J. C. Thomas, of Susanville, and Nathan Merenbach, of Visalia, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Erwin W. Widney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendant, who had previously been convicted of a felony, was charged by information filed in the superior court of Tulare county with carrying a pistol concealed upon his person, in violation of section 3 of the act of 1917 (St. 1917, p. 221), which reads:

"Every person who carries in any city, city and county, town or municipal corporation of this state any pistol, revolver, or other firearm concealed upon his person, without having a license to carry such firearm as hereinafter provided in section six of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and if he has been convicted previously of any felony, or of any crime made punishable by this act, he is guilty of a felony."

Having been found guilty as charged in the information, defendant is now before this court on his appeal from the judgment.

[1] The principal point relied on for a reversal is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict. It seems that defendant, while standing in a street of the city of Tulare, produced from somewhere a pistol with which he repelled an attack made upon him by a man of the name of Jaynes. While standing beside an automobile belonging to one V. S. Jones, with his right arm, which had been broken, resting on the body of the car, conversing with Jones, defendant was shot by Jaynes, who fired four times at him from the rear of Jones' automobile. Wounded in the thigh by one of the shots from Jaynes' pistol, defendant, as the scene was described by one of the witnesses, "doubled over as though he was falling, and when he straightened back up he had a gun in his hand." Holding this "gun" in his left hand, defendant fired several shots at Jaynes. Jones testified that there was no weapon in his automobile, and that he did not see any weapon on defendant's person prior to the shooting. Immediately after the affray, defendant went to a poolroom, where he laid the weapon on the counter. When he left, he picked it up, and took it away with him. From the poolroom he went to a hospital to have his wound dressed. Dr. Zumwalt, a witness for the prosecution, testified that at the hospital the pistol was taken from a pocket of defendant's coat as it lay on a table, and that when in the pocket it was concealed from sight. The city marshal testified that shortly after the arrest he asked defendant why he was carrying a "gun," and that the latter replied that "at times he had sums of money on him, and he carried it for his protection." This witness further testified that he later said to defendant, "Ross, you know what this means, don't you; a man formerly convicted of a felony carrying a concealed weapon?" and that to this question defendant replied, "Yes, I know what it means; it means one to five." Another witness for the prosecution, an eyewitness to the shooting, testified that he saw defendant when the latter came up to Jones' automobile, and that at that time he saw no firearm lying around any place. The foregoing constitutes the substance of the people's case, except that it also was shown by a certified copy of the record that defendant had previously been convicted of a felony in the superior court for Imperial county. Defendant, who took the stand in his own behalf, testified that he never saw the pistol prior to the shooting, but that when Jaynes shot him as he stood talking to Jones beside the latter's car he "went right down over that way and picked a gun up; * * * picked it up with my left hand. * * * I picked it up on the running board"—referring to the running board on Jones' automobile.

We think it clear that the evidence was sufficient to warrant the jury in concluding that appellant was carrying a pistol concealed upon his person. It, of course, is within the range of possibility that the weapon was lying on the running board of the automobile, even though Jones did testify that there was no pistol in his car, and even though another witness for the prosecution testified that he saw no firearm lying around as defendant stood beside the automobile. But, though it is possible that the pistol lay on the running board just where appellant, at the moment of emergency, could reach for it, and thus, forsooth, unexpectedly discover at his hand a lethal weapon wherewith to defend himself against the unanticipated attack, the probability of such a miraculous find was for the determination of the jury. From a consideration of all the evidence the jurors might well have inferred that no pistol lay opportunely on the running board of his friend's car, ready for defendant's convenient use in the moment of his dire necessity, but that that worthy, with canny prescience, had prudently prepared himself for just such a contingency by concealing the weapon on his person ready for instant use. Did the jurors credit the prodigies attributed to the mythical Merlin, and had they beheld the marvelous apparition of King Arthur's fair sword Excalibur as it was presented to him from out the waters of the lake by the arm "clothed in white samite," they might have given faith to defendant's wondrous story of the appearance of the pistol; but to hard-headed, practical men of affairs the instant appearance of the weapon at defendant's feet, just when he needed it most, must have savored too much of the thaumaturgic art of the magician to justify ready credence.

[2-4] The only evidence offered by the prosecution to prove that defendant had no license to carry a firearm was that of the city marshal, who testified that no license had been issued by him to defendant. Appellant claims that this was not sufficient. Because it was not shown to what class the city of Tulare belongs, it is argued that the municipality may have had a board of police commissioners, or a chief of police, or other head of the police department, by whom a license might have been issued. The contention lacks merit. It was not incumbent upon the prosecution to show that no license had been issued to appellant. The clause of the statute which exempts from its penal provisions those persons who have been licensed to carry firearms is so incorporated into and made such a substantial part of the definition of the offense that it doubtless was necessary to allege in the information that appellant was without a license to carry the pistol. There is such an allegation in the information, but it presents a negative which the prosecution was not called upon to prove, for the truth or falsity of the averment lay more immediately within the knowledge of the defendant himself. It is a well-settled rule of law that where the negative of an issue does not permit of direct proof, or where the facts come more immediately within the knowledge of the defendant, the onus probandi rests upon him. This doctrine is illustrated in cases of practicing medicine without a license, or of selling spirituous liquors without a license. People v. Boo Doo Hong, 122 Cal. 606, 55 Pac. 402; People v. Fortch, 13 Cal. App. 770, 110 Pac. 823; People v. Hing, 47 Cal. App. 327, 190 Pac. 662; People v. Goscinsky (Cal. App.) 198 Pac. 40; People v. Spagnoli (Cal. App.) 208 Pac. 185. In a prosecution for carrying a firearm concealed upon the person it would in many cases cast a great burden upon the people if they were required to prove that no license had been issued to the defendant. To do so the prosecution would have to show that the various magistrates who had jurisdiction to grant licenses had not in fact issued one in the particular case. If a license has been issued that fact is more immediately within the knowledge of the defendant and can be easily established by him; and there is no hardship or injustice in placing so slight a burden upon him. People v. Grass, 79 Misc. Rep. 457, 141 N. Y. Supp. 204.

[5] Appellant complains of injury arising from a remark made by the court during the progress of the trial. It seems that during the cross-examination of one of the people's witnesses the district attorney objected to a line of questions designed to bring out the fact that during his affray with Jaynes the defendant had been shot. In ruling on one of these objections the court said:

"Well, allow him to testify. The very best way is to let it in, because it occurred right there simultaneously, at one time. The jury are not going to misunderstand the instructions of the court; they know what matters—that it is made a crime for him to carry a weapon of that character, if he has been convicted of a felony."

Appellant now claims that by the words which we have italicized, "it is made a crime for him to carry a weapon of that character," the jurors were given to understand that the law makes it an offense simply to carry a weapon, concealed or unconcealed. But, when this part of the court's remarks is considered in connection with what had just preceded, it is evident that it is not subject to the construction placed upon it by appellant. In ruling upon a similar objection a moment or two previously the learned trial judge had said:

"The defendant is charged with carrying a concealed weapon—having a weapon of that character in his possession."

So that when, shortly after making this statement, the court said "it is made a crime for him to carry a weapon of that character," the jurors, as reasonable men, must have understood that the reference was to a "concealed weapon." Particularly is this so in view of the fact that in its formal charge to the jury the court carefully and accurately defined the offense described by the statute. The case clearly falls within the views announced in People v. Mayes, 113 Cal. 622, 623, 45 Pac. 860; People v. Woon Tuck Wo, 120 Cal. 294, 52 Pac. 833; and People v. Mooney, 132 Cal. 13, 17, 63 Pac. 1070. Nor was any objection made or exception taken to the court's remarks. As was said in People v. Kramer, 117 Cal. 651, 49 Pac. 843:

"The defendant cannot remain silent and take the chance of a favorable issue, and, losing, urge as ground for reversal an error which, but for his silence, might never have found its way into the case. His failure to object justly gives rise to the inference that at the time he saw no injury being done him, and he cannot complain on being met here by a barrier arising from his own omission."

To the same effect are People v. Miller, 177 Cal. 404, 408, 170 Pac. 817, and People v. Osborn, 12 Cal. App. 148, 106 Pac. 891.

[6] Error is claimed in refusing defendant's proffered instructions Nos. 3 and 6. These instructions are not set out in appellant's brief, and the only comment made upon them is the following:

"We believe the court erred in refusing the instruction offered by the defense and found on page 26 of the clerk's transcript. This instruction states the law as to presumption of innocence"—citing a case; and "the same is true of the instruction contained on page 29 of the clerk's transcript"—citing an authority.

We are not called upon to test the sufficiency of assignments of error thus made. The court charged the jury respecting the presumption of innocence; and, if appellant believes that the instruction as given was not sufficiently informing, we are entitled to know it by a more specific and illuminating assignment of error. People v. Wademan, 38 Cal. App. 132, 175 Pac. 791; People v. Zarate (Cal. App.) 201 Pac. 955.

[7, 8] Finally, it is urged that the court erred in permitting evidence of defendant's prior conviction to be placed before the jury. It is claimed that this was done in violation of section 1025 of the Penal Code. The point was never suggested by counsel in the trial court. It apparently is an afterthought, and is made for the first time in appellant's reply brief. For this reason we would be justified in ignoring it. We have, however, given the point consideration, and on examining the record find that there is no ground for the objection. The Penal Code provision which it is claimed was not observed (section 1025) provides that if a defendant, charged with having suffered a previous conviction, pleads not guilty of the offense for which he is informed against, but answers that he has suffered such previous conviction, then "the charge of the previous conviction must not be read to the jury, nor alluded to on the trial." The minute entry made by the clerk at the time of the arraignment states that defendant was informed by the court of his legal rights, and that after being so informed he waived the reading of the information, and upon being given a copy thereof pleaded "Not guilty as charged in the information." This plea put in issue the charge of the prior conviction, as well as the principle offense. Pen. Code, § 1019; People v. Gutierrez, 74 Cal. 81, 15 Pac. 444; People v. Wheatley, 88 Cal. 114, 26 Pac. 95. The question as to whether or not defendant had suffered such prior conviction was therefore properly submitted to the jury.

In conclusion, we have only to add that defendant has been convicted by a jury, and that there is nothing in the record before us to induce the belief that he did not have a fair and impartial trial on the merits, or that he was deprived of any legal or technical benefit or advantage given him by the law.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

---

(60 Cal. App. 231)

NEWTON v. DE ARMOND et al.
(Civ. 4330.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 26, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 24, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 21, 1923.)

Judgment ⇐143(9)—Where defendant in good faith believed that insurance company which had insured codefendant would defend on behalf of all defendants, and therefore did not appear, default judgment should have been vacated.

Where one defendant in good faith believed, from what an insurance agent told him, that the insurance company, having insured a codefendant who would defend the action on behalf of all the defendants, and therefore did not appear to defend, the court should have set aside the default.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Action by C. C. Newton against R. C. De Armond, James H. Buckley, and others. A default judgment was entered against second named defendant, whose motion to set aside the default and to vacate the judgment was denied, and he appeals. Reversed.

A. D. Barber, of Watsonville, for appellant.

O. C. Wilson, of San Francisco, and C. Huntington Jacobs, of Berkeley, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. A default judgment was entered against the defendant; he made a motion to set aside the default and to vacate the judgment; his motion was denied, and the defendant has appealed.

Heretofore (the exact date is not shown) the defendant was the owner and in possession of a certain Fageol motor truck; he sold the truck under an executory contract to R. C. De Armond, who did, at a date prior to the 28th day of September, 1921, take out a license in his own name, but registered the truck in the records of the motor vehicle department, showing James H. Buckley, this defendant, to be the legal owner. Just when the license was taken out the record does not show. On the 18th day of August a collision occurred between the Fagoel truck and a Packard truck owned and operated by the plaintiff. It is not claimed that the defendant was driving or was personally operating the Fageol motor truck at the time of the accident. The record contains much hearsay in the form of letters, written by third persons after the accident, which does not throw any light on the matter now before the court. However, the record shows that a complaint was filed December 19, 1921, in the superior court of Santa Clara county, and that a summons issued on the same day. The summons was served on the appellant in Santa Cruz county on December 22, 1921. The last day for the appellant to appear and answer was January 21, 1922. By the affidavit of the appellant it appeared that Mr. E. P. Pfingst was the resident agent at Watsonville of certain insurance companies, and "is an educated business man of high standing in the city of Watsonville"; that immediately after appellant was served with summons and complaint he saw Mr. Pfingst, informed him of the fact of the service, and that Mr. Pfingst stated to appellant that De Armond was insured, and that Pfingst had attended to the matter; that the appellant accepted the statement of Pfingst as meaning that the case would be defended on behalf of all of the defendants, and that appellant acted accordingly. The plaintiff caused appellant's default to be entered January 25, 1922, and a judgment to be entered on the default, February 2, 1922, and, immediately thereafter, he caused a copy of the notice of judgment to be mailed to the appellant at his post office address at Watsonville. When the appellant received the notice in question he took it at once to Mr. Pfingst, who, in turn, sent the same to the office of the attorneys of the insurance company in San Francisco, and it was not until the company's attorneys wrote back, on February 7, 1922, that Mr. Pfingst came to appreciate the fact that the attorneys representing the insurance company would appear for Mr. De Armond only. As soon as Mr. Pfingst learned of the necessities of Mr. Buckley he did, on February 16, 1922, mail to him a letter informing him of the necessity of his employing his own attorney. But at that time the default and judgment had been entered.

In addition to what we have said regarding the facts showing inadvertence, surprise, and excusable neglect, it is of much importance to state that when the appellant made his motion to vacate the judgment he tendered a verified answer, which alleged most positively that at the time of the accident the driver of the truck was not acting as his agent or in his employment, nor was anyone else operating the truck as the agent or servant of the appellant. Of course, if that allegation is true, then the appellant had a complete defense to the action on the merits thereof.

No fact of any kind or nature appears in the record which shows or tends to show that Mr. Buckley did not in the best of good faith receive the assurance above mentioned from Mr. Pfingst, or that he did not believe the statements made by Mr. Pfingst, or that he did not have a right to believe and act on the same. Under such a record the appellant was entitled to have his default set aside, and the trial court had no evidence before it which justified the trial court in refusing to vacate the default.

For the reasons stated the order is reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 183

PAVILION ICE RINK v. O'BRIEN et al.
(Civ. 4323.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 19, 1922.)

Injunction ⟸77(2)—Petition to restrain police officers from interfering with dance hall stated cause of action.

A complaint for injunction to restrain police commissioners, the chief of police, and policemen from trespassing on plaintiff's premises, which alleged that the refusal to issue a dance hall permit to plaintiff on January 1, 1921, was in effect a revocation of his right to do business, and that such revocation was arbitrary and capricious and without just cause, as required by the San Francisco Charter, stated a cause of action.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. J. Murasky, Judge.

Suit for injunction by the Pavilion Ice Rink, a corporation, against Daniel J. O'Brien and others, Board of Police Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco, and others. Demurrer to complaint sustained, judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. I. Stafford, Edward A. Cunha, and John T. Williams, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., Joseph T. O'Connor, Deputy Dist. Atty., and George Lull, City Atty., all of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff commenced this action to obtain an injunction restraining the defendants, who are the police commissioners, the chief of police, and officers of the police department of San Francisco, from trespassing upon plaintiff's premises, and from interfering with plaintiff's business of conducting a public dance hall in said city. It is alleged in the amended complaint that ever since April 21, 1918, plaintiff had been engaged in the business of conducting a public dance hall on the premises under a quarterly permit duly issued therefor by the board of police commissioners commencing on said date and continuing until January 1, 1921; that on the latter date the said Board refused to issue a permit to plaintiff, and that said action was arbitrary, capricious and without good cause. It is the theory of the amended complaint that these permits, though issued quarterly, were in effect merely renewals of the original permit of April 21, 1918, upon the faith of which large investments had been made by the plaintiff and a profitable business had been established.

The action was commenced at the same time as that of Pavilion Ice Rink v. Bryant et al. (No. 3976) 209 Pac. 76, which was decided by this court on July 20, 1922. The latter action was one in mandate to compel the tax collector and the board of police commissioners of San Francisco to issue the permit required for the period commencing January 1, 1921. In that action the trial court sustained a demurrer to plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend, and the judgment following upon that order was reversed by this court on the ground that the complaint alleged facts showing that the action of the police commissioners was arbitrary and capricious, and that a lawful business properly conducted and not injurious to property, persons, or public welfare was thereby confiscated. In this action for an injunction the trial court also sustained the defendants' demurrer, and the appeal is from the judgment which followed for the defendants.

On this appeal the appellant urges the same grounds for reversal as were urged in the mandamus action. The amended complaint is practically identical with the complaint which was considered in the former case. Though it may be conceded that a permit is necessary to conduct the business of a public dance hall, it is argued that the issuance of these permits for quarterly periods was merely a renewal of the original permit issued on April 21, 1918, and that the refusal to issue a permit on January 1, 1921, was in effect a revocation of appellant's right to do business. It is then said that such revocation was had arbitrarily and capriciously and without just cause, as required by the San Francisco charter. If, as held in the mandamus case, the complaint stated facts sufficient to entitle the appellant to the issuance of a permit for the period commencing January 1, 1921, it follows that the amended complaint in this action is sufficient to entitle the appellant to an injunction restraining these respondents from interfering with appellant's business until that right is legally revoked.

Judgment reversed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 185

PAVILION ICE RINK v. O'BRIEN et al. (Civ. 4324.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 19, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error ⇐920(3)—Where hearing on pleadings used as affidavits, order of trial court not disturbed on appeal.

Where the answer to a complaint for injunction denied all the material allegations of the complaint, and both the complaint and answer were used as affidavits on hearing and were the only evidence on which the trial court's order was based, as no findings were required, it must be presumed on appeal, in support of the order of the trial court, that it found the allegations of the complaint to be untrue and the allegations of the answer to be true, and hence order of the trial court may not be disturbed.

2. Appeal and error ⇐954(1)—Injunction ⇐135—Granting temporary injunction addressed to trial court's discretion.

Granting or refusing a temporary injunction is a matter addressed to the discretion of the trial court, whose action may not be disturbed on appeal, except when an abuse of that discretion is shown.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. J. Murasky, Judge.

Suit for injunction by the Pavilion Ice Rink, a corporation, against Daniel J. O'Brien and others, as the board of Police Commissioners of the City and County of San Francisco, and others. From an order refusing a preliminary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Order affirmed.

H. I. Stafford, Edward A. Cunha, and John T. Williams, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., Joseph T. O'Connor, Deputy Dist. Atty., and George Lull, City Atty., all of San Francisco, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from an order of the superior court refusing a preliminary injunction to restrain the police commissioners, chief of police, and officers of the police department from trespassing upon plaintiff's premises and from interfering with its business of conducting a public dance hall in the city and county of San Francisco.

[1] Application for a temporary injunction was made in the action numbered 4323 (212 Pac. 631), just decided, and was heard upon the amended complaint, which was considered in that case, and upon the answer of the defendants. The answer denied all the material allegations of the amended complaint, and both the amended complaint and answer were used as affidavits upon the hearing, and constituted the only evidence upon which the order of the trial court was based. As no findings are required in a proceeding of this nature, we must presume in support of the order of the trial court that it found the allegations of the amended complaint to be untrue and the allegations of the answer to be true. Such being the case, this court may not disturb the order of the trial court.

[2] The granting or refusing to grant a temporary injunction is a matter which is addressed to the discretion of the trial court (Kendall v. Foulks, 180 Cal. 171, 174, 179 Pac. 886), and the action of the trial court may not be disturbed on appeal, except when an abuse of that discretion is shown. This is especially true where the motion for a temporary injunction is based upon the complaint alone and a verified answer denying all the material allegations of the complaint. Kendall v. Foulks, supra.

Order affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

---

⇐For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

60 Cal. App. 206

WILCOX v. HARDISTY et al.
(Civ. 2513.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 22, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court, Feb. 16, 1923.)

1. Deeds ⟸208(5)—Delivery to third person to deliver at grantor's death justifies inference of parting with control.

Evidence that a grantor delivered a deed to a third person, with instructions to the latter to deliver to the grantee after the grantor's death, is sufficient, without any other evidence of intention, to justify the inference that the grantor thereby intended to part with all right thereafter to control the deed.

2. Appeal and error ⟸996—Whether permissible inference is overcome by other proof is within exclusive province of trial court.

Whether the permissible inference that grantor intended to part with all control over the deed by delivering it to a third person is overcome by other proof involves the question of weighing the evidence, a matter which is within the exclusive province of the trial court.

3. Deeds ⟸56(2)—Intention of grantor at time of parting with possession controls.

The intention of the grantor, which is controlling on the question of delivery is that existing at the very time of the delivery of the deed to the depository, and prior and subsequent acts and statements by the grantor are important only as throwing light upon the intention at that time.

4. Deeds ⟸61—Uncertainty of depository as to effect of delivery is immaterial.

The fact that the attorney, to whom the grantor delivered deeds to be by him delivered to the grantees upon the grantor's death, was uncertain as to the effect of such delivery, and thought he would have returned the deeds to the grantor if she had requested them, is immaterial on the issue of delivery by the grantor; the question being the grantor's intention and what the depository would have had a right to do.

5. Appeal and error ⟸205, 1031(4)—Sustaining objection to question held not prejudicial in absence of offer of proof.

In a suit to quiet title involving the issue of delivery of the deed under which plaintiff claimed, a question asked defendant's witness as to whether anything was said by grantor at the time certain deeds were destroyed was so framed as not to indicate that the information sought was immaterial to any issue, so that no prejudice by the exclusion of such evidence was shown, in the absence of a showing as to what the answer would have been, and no prejudice can be presumed.

6. Deeds ⟸181—Evidence as to parties requesting witness to examine deeds before their destruction held immaterial.

Where a witness had testified that she had examined certain deeds before they were destroyed by the grantor, it was immaterial who requested her to make the examination.

7. Trial ⟸396(3)—Findings as to delivery of deed held sufficient under the pleadings.

Where defendant's cross-complaint alleged that grantor attempted to convey the lands in controversy to plaintiff, but that the deed prepared for that purpose was never signed, sealed, nor acknowledged by the grantor, that she requested an attorney to keep the deed until she sent for it, and he promised to return it upon her demand, a finding that the deed was duly executed and delivered to the attorney, to be held by him until the grantor's death, and then be delivered to the respective grantees therein named, and that it was duly executed by the grantor and duly delivered to the plaintiff, was as definite as the pleadings and responsive to the issues thereby raised, though there was no express finding that the grantor intended to part with all control over the deeds when she gave them to the attorney.

8. Quieting title ⟸49—Plaintiff can attack subsequent deed only in so far as it affects her lands.

Plaintiff, in a suit to quiet title, can attack a subsequent deed to defendant only in so far as it affects the lands previously conveyed to plaintiff, and a judgment that the deed was null and void will be modified by inserting thereafter the words "in so far as it purports to convey lands previously conveyed to plaintiff," even though the judgment would not be conclusive as to the rights of those not parties to the suit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; A. I. McSorley, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Ida I. Wilcox against Etta Hardisty, formerly Etta Jenkins, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the named defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

R. L. Beardslee and Nutter & Hancock, all of Stockton, for appellant.

Snyder & Snyder, of Stockton, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. In this action the plaintiff was adjudged to be the owner of certain lands in Calaveras county under a deed alleged to have been executed by her mother, Julia A. Jenkins.

In January, 1896, Mrs. Jenkins, a widow, and her daughter Etta, defendant herein, resided on the former's ranch in Calaveras county. Two other daughters, the plaintiff and Mrs. Emma Parker, resided elsewhere. At the request of Mrs. Jenkins, Frank F. Carnduff, a lawyer, having offices at Biggs, Butte county, went to the ranch and prepared four deeds. By reason of a crippled condition of her hands, Mrs. Jenkins was unable to write, and she signed these deeds by her mark, on the 18th day of January, 1896; Carnduff writing her name and signing his own as a witness. These deeds purported to convey 1,350 acres of land, a certain part to one Hiram Tyrer and the remainder in separate parcels to the three daughters; that conveyed to plaintiff being the land in suit. There being no notary public present, Mrs. Jenkins requested Carnduff to make proof of the execution of the instruments so as to entitle them to be recorded. He took the deeds away with him, and January 25, 1896, made such proof before a notary public at Biggs; the notary attaching his certificates to the deeds. The deed to Tyrer was mailed to Mrs. Jenkins, and the others retained by Carnduff. Carnduff testified:

"As to the deeds to Etta Jenkins, Mrs. Parker, and Mrs. Wilcox, she [Mrs. Jenkins] instructed me to have them acknowledged, keep them in my possession until her death, and to give them to no living person but Ida Wilcox, in case of her death, or I wanted to be released from the trust, * * * and after her death, to give them to the parties named therein. * * * 'In case of my death,' I said in my testimony, * * * or, wishing to surrender my trust, I should deliver them over to Mrs. Wilcox. * * * After they were acknowledged, I put them into an envelope, * * * and I wrote on it the instructions, as near as I can remember, that Mrs. Jenkins had given me. I wrote on them fully in case of my death who they were to be delivered over to."

He testified that he again went to Mrs. Jenkins' home at her request, and under her direction drafted three other deeds to her daughters, making a different division of the land, by which Etta was given a larger part thereof; that these deeds were executed February 8, 1896, in the same manner as those of January 18th; that Mrs. Jenkins at that time said that Etta was dissatisfied with the division, of the property theretofore made, and was "raising the devil with her," and that she had to make a change to satisfy her, "as she had to live with her"; that Mrs. Jenkins instructed him to take the deeds of February 8th, "have them acknowledged, and hold them until she sent for them"; that after she had signed the new deeds, "I said to Mrs. Jenkins, 'What shall I do with those three deeds of January 18th?' She says, 'You keep them and carry out my instructions;' and I says, 'Well, now, I presume you are going to write for these deeds; now, suppose I get a letter from some one representing you, asking that I return the deeds of January 18th, what shall I do about it?' She says, 'You return no deeds to any person;' that is meaning the deeds of January 18th, that I had in my charge;" that in June, 1896, he received a letter from Mrs. Jenkins, requesting him to return the deeds of February 8th, and that he then mailed them to her; and that in August, 1905, he delivered the deeds of January 18th to the plaintiff, he then being about to travel extensively with his family. Carnduff further testified that he "understood that those deeds were to be escrow deeds," and that "Mrs. Jenkins had no right to make second deeds of the same property;" that if she had demanded the return of the deeds of January 18th, "I should have given them to her. * * * I claim that a person has a right to divide or handle his property until they are dead. That is my doctrine." When asked if he told Mrs. Jenkins that he "understood the law to be that she could have the deeds back at any time that she wanted them," he replied, "I did not discuss the law with her." He testified that there was no understanding that the deeds were to be returned to Mrs. Jenkins if she so requested. The record book of the notary public at Biggs was admitted in evidence. It showed that Carnduff made proof of the execution of the deeds of January 18th and those of February 8th, as testified by him. Carnduff testified that the defendant was not present when Mrs. Jenkins instructed him what to do with the deeds of January 18th.

Relative to the deeds of January 18th, the defendant testified:

"Mr. Carnduff gave my mother the deeds. She said she did not have a safe place to keep them. He said, 'Well, you can give them to me, as Mr. Jenkins did, if you wish,' or words to that effect. * * * She says, 'I guess I should, but if I want these deeds, can I have them?' * * * He says, 'Any time you want these deeds, you can always have them;' and she says, 'With that understanding, I give you the deeds; take care of them for me.' * * * They were returned to my mother * * * some time in June, * * * the same year. * * * We buried them * * * in the bedroom; we took up the carpet and a board and dug a hole and buried them. * * * The following August * * * my mother destroyed them, she burned them. Mr. Carnduff was not at the house of my mother * * * in the month of February, 1896."

August 23, 1897, Mrs. Jenkins executed a deed conveying a larger part of the land to defendant than was conveyed to her by that of January 18, 1896. October 27, 1898, Mrs. Jenkins made her will, by which she attempted to dispose of the ranch, giving the defendant the same lands described in the deed of August 23, 1897, and appointing her executrix without bonds. July 7, 1899, Mrs. Jenkins executed a codicil, making some changes in her will, but not cutting down the acreage devised to defendant. Mrs. Jenkins died February 5, 1907, and her said will, together with the codicil, was thereafter duly admitted to probate. February 6, 1907, the plaintiff caused the deed to her, of January 18, 1896, to be duly recorded and on the 12th day of February, 1907, the defendant caused the deed of August 23, 1897, to be recorded.

[1, 2] From the foregoing conflicting testimony it devolved upon the court to determine whether the deed under which plaintiff claims title was one of the instruments executed January 18, 1896, and, if so, whether Mrs. Jenkins delivered it to Carnduff, "intending at the time of such delivery to the custodian to part forever with all right or power thereafter to repossess, retake, or control the deed." Long v. Ryan, 166 Cal. 442, 444, 137 Pac. 29. While there is sufficient evidence to support a contrary finding, this court cannot say that the evidence is not sufficient to sustain the finding that the deed was so executed and delivered. Bury v. Young, 98 Cal. 446, 33 Pac. 338, 35 Am. St. Rep. 186; Husheon v. Kelley, 162 Cal. 656, 124 Pac. 231; Estate of Cornelius, 151 Cal. 550, 91 Pac. 329; Rice v. Carey, 170 Cal. 748, 151 Pac. 135. Evidence that a grantor delivered his deed to a third person, with instructions to deliver it to the grantee after the grantor's death, without any other evidence of intention, is sufficient to justify the inference that the grantor thereby intended to part with all right thereafter to control the deed. Whether such inference is overcome by other proof involves the question of weighing the evidence, a matter within the exclusive province of the trial court. In Saltzsieder v. Saltzsieder, 219 N. Y. 523, 114 N. E. 856, it is said:

"The evidence must show that the owner intended in the delivery to divest himself of his right to withdraw, revoke, or control the instrument as completely as though he were delivering it to the person named as grantee, and by words or act expressly or impliedly acknowledged his intention. Whether or not the intention existed and was expressed is a question of fact solvable by a consideration of the other facts. * * * In the present case the owner gave to a third person the instrument, adequate in form to convey the land to the persons named as grantees, with accompanying instructions to the third person to hold it until the owner's death and hand it over then to those persons. The act and language, considered by themselves, are adequate to expressly acknowledge the intention of the owner to be immediately and unconditionally bound by the provisions of the instrument."

In Wilson v. Bridgeforth, 108 Miss. 199, 66 South. 524, the grantor, after executing deeds and his will, handed them to his attorney and said:

"Here are some papers I want you to keep and give to my children after my death."

The court said:

"All that is necessary in order for the depositary to become the agent of the grantee is for the deed to be deposited with him for delivery to the grantee 'without a reservation by the grantor, express or implied, of the right to retake it or otherwise control its use.' * * * This delivery of the deeds was certainly unaccompanied by an express reservation on the part of the grantor of the right to retake or otherwise control them; and we fail to find anything in the evidence from which such a reservation can be inferred, except the mere fact that the will was deposited with Wilson along with the deeds."

The trial court in that case adjudged that the "deeds never became operative, for the reason that they were never intended to be, and in fact were not, delivered by the grantor." The judgment was reversed on appeal for the reasons stated.

[3] The intention of the grantor which is controlling is that existing at the very time of the delivery to the depository. Prior and subsequent acts and statements by the grantor are important only as throwing light upon his intention at the time of such delivery.

"A subsequent change of intention could not affect the delivery thus completed, and even a mental reservation of the testator contrary to that expressed by his words and deeds, existing only in his mind, would not invalidate the delivery effected by his acts and the words actually used." Hudson v. Hudson, 287 Ill. 286, 122 N. E. 497; Norton v. Collins, 81 Kan. 33, 105 Pac. 26; White v. Watts, 118 Iowa, 549, 92 N. W. 660.

[4] Carnduff seems to have been uncertain as to the legal effect of the delivery to him of the deeds of January 18, 1896. It was within the province of the court, not that of the witness, to determine such effect. What he understood the effect of the transaction to be was important only as bearing upon the value of his testimony as to what was actually said and done. Evidence of what he "thought and of what he would have done with the deeds is of very little value, for we are concerned here only with what he had the right to do with them." Wilson v. Bridgeforth, supra; Peterson v. Bisbee, 191 Mich. 439, 158 N. W. 134; White v. Watts, supra; Adams v. Harris, 118 Wash. 189, 203 Pac. 48. Appellant relies on the case of Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 151 Pac. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703, In that case the trial court found that the deed there in question was not delivered with a present intention to pass title, and the higher court did not hold that the evidence was insufficient to support a contrary finding, but said:

"Taking into consideration all these circumstances, it cannot be said but that they fairly warrant the inferences drawn by the trial court and on which its finding of nondelivery was based."

[5] It is contended that the court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objection to defendant's question as follows:

"Q. Was anything said by your mother at the time those deeds were destroyed?

"Mr. Snyder: That is objected to upon the ground that it is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial and hearsay testimony.

"The Court: Objection sustained. * * *

"Mr. Hancock: We take an exception to the ruling of the court on the last question.

"The Court: You do not contend seriously that that is admissible, do you?

"Mr. Hancock: Well, there is a question in my mind about it.

"The Court: The record may show that you have an exception. The court is clear on the question.

"Mr. Hancock: I want it a matter of record; that is all."

The question was not so framed as to indicate that the evidence sought to be elicited was material to any issue in the case, and counsel did not suggest to the court what he sought to prove. The question was broad enough to include matters wholly foreign to the case. Prejudice is not to be presumed, and there is nothing in the record from which this court can say that the evidence sought was material.

[6] Mrs. Fouts testified that she was present in August, 1896, when Mrs. Jenkins burned three deeds; that "they were opened, and we looked at them and burned them one by one." She was then asked: "Were you requested to look at them?" To this question the court sustained plaintiff's objection "on the ground that it is irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial." The testimony of the witness shows that she had looked at the deeds, and knew at least some of the contents thereof, and no reason is suggested why it was material to show who requested her to look at them. Other rulings of which complaint is made are similar to those discussed and it is sufficient to say that they were not erroneous.

[7] At the oral argument, appellant urged that the findings are insufficient, in that there is no express finding to the effect that Mrs. Jenkins intended to part with all control over the deeds at the time she gave them into the possession of Carnduff on January 18, 1896. Appellant's cross-complaint alleges that Mrs. Jenkins, on January 18, 1896, "attempted to give, grant, alien and confirm" the lands in controversy to plaintiff, but that the deed prepared for that purpose was "never signed, sealed, nor acknowledged by said Mrs. Julia A. Jenkins"; that she requested Carnduff to keep the deed until she sent for it, and that he promised to return it upon her demand; that he thereupon returned the deed to her at her request, and that she destroyed it. The court found that the deeds of January 18, 1896, were duly executed by Mrs. Jenkins, and that they were thereupon "delivered to said Frank F. Carnduff, to be held by him until the death of said Julia A. Jenkins, to be then by the said Frank F. Carnduff delivered to the respective grantees therein named, and in case of the death of said Frank F. Carnduff before the death of Julia Jenkins, or if for any reason the said Frank F. Carnduff should so desire, the said deeds were to be delivered by said Frank F. Carnduff to said Ida I. Wilcox to be held by her until the death of Julia A. Jenkins." The court further found that the deed upon which plaintiff relies "was duly executed by the said Julia A. Jenkins, and duly delivered to the said Ida I. Wilcox." The foregoing findings are as definite as the pleadings, and are responsive to the issues thereby raised. In Williams v. Kidd, 170 Cal. 631, 638, 151 Pac. 1, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 703, the trial court found that Williams executed the deed there in question and handed it to Kidd, with directions to deliver it to the grantee after Williams' death. The court said:

"It may be true that if the only evidence in the case and the only facts found were as recited above with reference to the making of the deed—the instructions of Williams and the carrying out thereof by Kidd—it might be held that these were sufficient to show that the deposit of the deed with Kidd was accompanied by an intention on the part of Williams that title to the property should thereby vest immediately in the grantee."

In Newman v. Fidler, 177 Ind. 220, 97 N. E. 785, where a deed and a will had been handed to a depository, the court found:

"That after said deed was signed and acknowledged * * * the said decedent handed said deed to Robert J. Loveland, with instructions to deliver them after her death."

It was contended that the finding did not show that the grantor had relinquished control of the deed. The court said:

"The facts found here show * * * that, after Mrs. Newman had executed her will, and signed and acknowledged the deed, she handed the latter to a third person, and instructed him to deliver it after her death. She thereby parted with any right to the possession of the instrument."

Since the findings are responsive to the issues raised by the pleadings, it must be presumed in support of the judgment that the delivery found to have been made was an effective delivery.

[8] The court adjudged the deed of August 23, 1897, "to be null and void and of no force and effect." This is assigned as error. That deed purports to convey to defendant certain lands included in the deed upon which plaintiff's cause of action is based and other lands not in controversy here. There was no issue presented by the pleadings as to any land except that which was common to both deeds, and the findings and judgment should have been limited accordingly. The court found that the deed of August 23d was duly executed and delivered. While it was not effective to transfer title to lands theretofore conveyed to plaintiff, the plaintiff has no standing to contest its validity as to other lands. While respondent contends, and correctly, that the judgment has no validity except as between the parties and with respect only to the land in controversy, the judgment should be expressly limited to that particular land.

The judgment is modified by inserting, after the word "void" therein the words "in so far as it purports to convey to defendant any of the lands described in the aforesaid deed, executed on the 18th day of January, 1896, by Julia A. Jenkins to the plaintiff," and, as so modified, the judgment is affirmed, respondent to recover costs on appeal.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

60 Cal. App. 129

SIMMONS et ux. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al. (Civ. 3872.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 12, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court. Feb. 12, 1923.)

1. Street railroads ⊂=117(26)—Driving upon track not negligence per se.

It is not negligence per se merely to drive a vehicle astride of or in close proximity to street car tracks.

2. Street railroads ⊂=85(3)—Other vehicles entitled to use street.

A street car company has the right to use the street only in common with the public, and other vehicles have the right to travel over the entire street, though they must not unnecessarily interfere with or obstruct a street car in its movement.

3. Street railroads ⊂=117(29)—Failure of vehicle driver to look behind not negligence per se.

It is not negligence per se for the driver of a motor bus, while driving upon a street car track, to fail to keep a constant watch behind for approaching street cars.

4. Carriers ⊂=235, 280(1), 300—Bus driver is a common carrier required to exercise utmost care, and is required to look behind at intervals for street cars.

A bus driver is a common carrier required to exercise the utmost care and diligence for the safety of his passengers, and the jury may find that he is thereby required while driving along a street car track to look behind at intervals to ascertain whether a street car is approaching.

5. Carriers ⊂=300—Vigilance required of driver of bus on street car track is question for jury.

The amount of vigilance required of a bus driver as a carrier of passengers while driving along street car tracks is a question for the jury.

6. Street railroads ⊂=99(5)—Vehicle driver should leave track on receiving signals.

It is the duty of the driver of a vehicle to turn off or away from street car tracks when he sees or hears, or by the exercise of reasonable care should see or hear, a car approaching from the rear, and he should listen for signals from such a car.

7. Carriers ⊂=318(7)—Evidence held to warrant finding gong was rung for bus so that there was concurrent negligence in a collision.

In an action by a passenger in a motor bus against the owner of the bus and a street car company, for damages sustained in a collision between a street car and the bus, evidence held to warrant the jury in finding that the motorman of the street car rang his gong in approaching the bus from the rear, so that the jury could find the bus driver was negligent in failing to heed the gong without finding he suddenly turned upon the track as claimed by the street car company, and therefore could properly render a verdict against both defendants for concurrent negligence.

8. Carriers ⊂=300—Utmost vigilance requires bus driver to turn off from street car tracks when signal is sounded.

The utmost care and vigilance which the driver of a bus owes to his passengers under Civ. Code, § 2100, requires him when driving along an interurban track to exercise the utmost care to hear the warning signal of a car approaching from behind, and to turn off from the tracks as soon as he safely could do so, and it was negligence for him to remain upon the tracks after hearing such signal merely because it was more comfortable for the passengers.

9. Negligence ⊂=92—Contributory negligence of bus driver not imputable to passenger.

In an action for injuries to a passenger in a motor bus, resulting from a collision between the bus and a street car, the negligence of the bus driver who was the operator of a public conveyance for hire is not imputable to his passengers.

10. Street railroads ⊂=114(9)—Mere ringing of gong does not disprove negligence as cause of collision with vehicle.

Mere proof that the motorman of an interurban car, approaching from behind a motor bus, sounded his gong, is not irreconcilable with a finding that the motorman was negligent in other respects.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by W. A. Simmons and wife against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and Fred Walker. Judgment for the plaintiffs against both defendants, and defendant Walker appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 212 Pac. 641.

W. H. Thomas and B. P. Gibbs, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Plaintiffs, who are husband and wife, brought this action to recover damages for injuries suffered by the wife in a collision between an electric interurban car operated by the defendant railway company and an auto bus or jitney operated by a servant of the defendant Walker—a carrier of passengers for hire. Mrs. Simmons was a passenger on the auto bus. Walker and the railway company were made defendants, on the theory that the negligence of each concurred in causing the injury. The jury returned a verdict against both defendants, who, upon different records, present separate appeals from the judgment. The appeal now to be considered is that of the defendant Walker.

The collision occurred on Santa Monica boulevard, between Twenty-Fifth and Twenty-Sixth streets, in the city of Santa Monica, while both the bus and an interurban car of the railway company were proceeding easterly toward the city of Los Angeles. Mrs. Simmons had boarded the bus at Third street and Santa Monica boulevard. According to appellant's witnesses, the catastrophe, which was a rear-end collision, was caused by the interurban car crashing into the rear of the bus while that vehicle was traveling easterly along Santa Monica boulevard astride of the southerly car rail, and after it had traveled in this manner for a distance of about four blocks from Twenty-First street, where it had stopped at the curb to take on a passenger.

The railway company operates an interurban railway from the city of Santa Monica to the city of Los Angeles, and for that purpose it uses double tracks along Santa Monica boulevard. That highway runs in a general easterly and westerly direction, is graded, and has a width of 52 feet between the curbs. The distance between the south curb and the nearest rail is 17½ feet, affording ample space between the curb and the railroad tracks to accommodate automobiles and other private vehicles. But there is quite a slope from the southerly rail to the curb. This slope is so marked that it is the custom of many automobilists traveling over the boulevard to keep as near as possible to the center line of the highway, even though by doing so they "straddle" the street car rail.

At the trial each defendant sought to show that the negligence of the other was the proximate cause of the injury. Appellant concedes that the evidence might show one or the other of the defendants to be negligent and hence liable for the injury, but claims that the evidence is such that it is not possible that both could be guilty of negligence. Whether, therefore, the evidence will support a verdict against both defendants is the sole question presented by this appeal.

Appellant's theory of the accident: According to the testimony of witnesses for appellant, the driver of the auto bus, after taking on the passenger at Twenty-First street, looked once to see if any interurban car was coming toward him from behind. Seeing none, he started up his vehicle, drove it diagonally a distance of about 40 feet toward the center of the highway until its left wheels were astride of the southerly rail, when he straightened the wheels, and then, with his bus still astride of the rail, proceeded easterly along the boulevard at the rate of 15 miles an hour for a distance of about four blocks, when an east-bound interurban car of the railway company, which was following the bus and which had been steadily gaining on it, crashed into the rear of the latter vehicle without giving any warning of its approach. The driver of the bus testified that he drove the four blocks astride the rail "because it was more comfortable for the passengers and also for the driver." The driver does not claim that he looked behind him to see if perchance a car of the railway company might be approaching from the rear, save on the one occasion when, as he drove diagonally from the curb at Twenty-First street toward and onto the car track, he looked to see if a car was coming toward him.

The railway company's theory: According to the description of the accident as given by witnesses for the railway company, the auto bus, after taking on the passenger at Twenty-First street, moved from the curb in a diagonal direction toward the car tracks, but, instead of "straddling" the rail, was "straightened out" before it reached the nearest rail, and then was driven easterly along Santa Monica boulevard parallel with the southerly rail but sufficiently distant therefrom to permit an interurban car traveling in the same direction to pass without danger of collision, and continued thus along the boulevard for a distance of about four blocks, followed by the electric car, when, suddenly and without giving the motorman any warning of his intention to change his course, the driver of the bus turned his vehicle abruptly to the left, toward and onto the car tracks, directly in the path of the interurban car, which, traveling in the same direction as the bus, ran into the rear end of the latter vehicle before the surprised motorman, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, could arrest the momentum of his car in time to avoid the collision.

Appellant concedes the rule to be, as indeed he must, that, where an injury is occasioned by the separate but concurrent negligence of two parties at one and the same time, each is liable, and an action will lie against both. But though conceding that he and his codefendant would be liable if the injury were proximately caused by their concurrent negligence, appellant contends that, under the facts of this case, it was impossible for both defendants to have been negligent. His argument runs substantially as follows: Because a verdict was rendered against the railway company it necessarily must follow that the jury found that appellant's auto bus was not suddenly and unexpectedly turned onto the railroad tracks in the path of the oncoming interurban car, as described by the railway company's witnesses; for, if the bus had been driven in that manner, no negligence could have been imputed to the servants of the railway company, and that defendant would not have been held liable; and if appellant's bus was not driven in the manner described by the railway company's witnesses, then the jury necessarily must have accepted appellant's theory, i. e., that the bus was crashed into from the rear while being driven astride the southerly rail. And it further is argued that, since it is not negligence per se to drive a vehicle along or in close proximity to street car tracks, and since the failure of one thus driving his vehicle to keep a constant watch behind for an approaching street car does not show a want of ordinary care nor constitute negligence per se (O'Connor v. United Railways, 168 Cal. 43, 141 Pac. 809), appellant cannot be held liable under a theory of the accident which makes his codefendant liable.

The vice of appellant's argument lies in the assumption that, because the failure of one who is driving along a street car track to keep a constant watch behind for oncoming cars is not negligence per se, therefore one so driving is not guilty of negligence, though he never look behind and even though he give no heed to a warning to turn off the track.

[1-3] Unquestionably the mere fact that one is driving a vehicle astride of or in close proximity to street car tracks is not negligence per se. Public highways are for the use of the traveling public, and the right of a street car company is only to use the street in common with the public. The railway company has no exclusive right to travel even over that portion of the street which is covered by its tracks. Other vehicles have the right to travel over the entire street, including the space between the tracks. As one of the traveling public, the driver of an automobile is entitled as of right to use the entire street, subject only to the limitation that, as the use of the street by the railway company is confined to its tracks the driver must not unnecessarily interfere with or obstruct a car in its movement thereon. O'Connor v. United Railways, supra. Equally true is it that it is not negligence per se for one who is driving his vehicle astride of or in close proximity to a street car track to fail to keep constant watch behind for an approaching car. In O'Connor v. United Railways, 168 Cal. at page 49, 141 Pac. at page 811, the court says:

"Nor did the fact that he [the driver of the hotel bus] did not keep a constant watch behind for an approaching car while driving near the track show want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff or constitute negligence per se." (Italics ours.)

The reason for this, as stated in the O'Connor Case, is that one driving along a public highway in the same direction in which a car may approach from behind is necessarily engaged in looking in front of him to have a care that he does not collide with some other vehicle ahead, enjoying also the common use of the highway. The exercise of ordinary care makes it his duty to look ahead so as to avoid any collision with those in advance of him. And as it is not possible for him to look simultaneously forward and backward, it necessarily is not negligence per se to fail to keep a constant watch behind for an approaching street car.

[4, 5] But though it cannot be said that the failure to keep a constant watch behind for an approaching street car is negligence per se, it does not follow that one may drive his vehicle for any distance astride of or in close proximity to car tracks without ever looking behind or even listening for the approach of a street car. What amount of vigilance was requisite to constitute the "utmost care and diligence" required of this appellant as a carrier of passengers for hire was a question which the jury was to determine, not alone from what the driver of the auto bus may have done in the way of looking and listening, but from a consideration of the reciprocal rights of all the parties entitled to the use of the highway, including those of the street car company. O'Connor v. United Railways, 168 Cal. 49, 50, 141 Pac. at page 811.

"The car company is entitled in the interest of the public service to a free and unobstructed passage at all times of its cars over its tracks when necessary, and when such movement is being made free vehicles must yield a clear right of way to it for that purpose." Id.

[6] For this reason, although it cannot be said that one who is driving a vehicle along or in close proximity to a street car track is in duty bound to keep a constant watch behind for approaching cars, it is his duty to turn off or away from the tracks when he sees or hears, or, by the exercise of reasonable care, should see or hear, a car approaching from the rear. He should listen for and he should heed whatever signal there may be of an approaching car. Swayne v. Connecticut Co., 86 Conn. 439, 85 Atl. 634, 737; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co., 68 Conn. 215, 35 Alt. 1126; Kowalkowski v. Milwaukee, etc., Ry. Co., 157 Wis. 473, 146 N. W. 801; North Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Peuser, 190 Ill. 67, 60 N. E. 78; Chicago, etc., Ry. Co. v. Bert, 69 Ill. 388; O'Brien v. Washington, etc., Co., 79 Wash. 82, 139 Pac. 771; Keyes v. Metropolitan Street Ry. Co., 161 Mo. App. 545, 144 S. W. 166; 36 Cyc. 1549. The rule is stated by the Missouri Supreme Court as follows:

"The plaintiff [a teamster] had a right to drive along the street and even drive upon the track of the defendant if the condition of the street or the exigencies of the case required it, and he should have exercised ordinary care in listening for the gong or signal of an approaching car from the rear and if he heard one to have withdrawn his wagon from the tracks." Zander v. Transit Co., 206 Mo. 445, 103 S. W. 1006.

It has been held by eminent authority that though one driving along or in close proximity to street car tracks need not keep a constant watch for street cars approaching from the rear, he should look behind him from time to time so that, if a car be near, he may turn off and allow it to pass without hindrance or any slackening of its ordinary speed, and that his failure to observe such precaution is at his own risk. Adolph v. Central Park, etc., R. R. Co., 76 N. Y. 530; Theobald v. Transit Co., 191 Mo. 395, 90 S. W. 354; McGauley v. Transit Co., 179 Mo. 583, 79 S. W. 461; Booth on Street Railways, § 316. In Adolph v. Central Park, etc., R. R. Co., supra, Mr. Justice Folger, in a very carefully considered opinion, states the rule and the reasons therefor as follows:

"The car cannot turn off the track to go by. He [the driver of a vehicle ahead of the car] can turn off the track to let it go by. He must do this. He must be ready to do it, when the need arises. * * * So that the driver of the common vehicle, should be in constant expectation of the coming of a car, with a constant feeling that he will be at once required to do his duty of leaving the track. Therefore it is due from him, not only that he should turn off from the track when called upon to do so by a servant of the company, but that he should be more active than that in learning a necessity for getting out of the way of a coming car. To this end he should listen for whatever signal there may be, either of tinkle of bell or cry of driver; and he should also, while from time to time looking forward to see that his way is clear before him, look behind him from time to time to see whether he should not soon turn off, so that a car may pass without hindrance or undue slackening of ordinary speed. * * * He is bound to keep out of the way when the need, under such circumstances, arises that he should. Hence, there is upon him the duty of learning, when the need has arisen, or is likely to arise; and as it is a duty actively to be performed, he is bound to use all the ordinary means of learning; and all his natural senses are surely a part of those means, and to be used in such way as that they will bring information to him. So that he may not wait to hear a signal of the approach of a car, but he must at intervals look backward for it. He is enjoying a right liable to frequent interruption. It is a condition of his enjoyment of it that he make no needless delay. He should use his senses to effect that result." (Italics ours.)

[7] We do not find it necessary to go so far as the New York courts and to hold with them that it is the duty of the driver of the free vehicle to look behind him from time to time to see whether he should not turn off to permit an approaching car of the railway company to pass him. In the instant case there is evidence that the bus driver was given timely warning by the ringing of the gong on the interurban car, but that he gave no heed thereto. True, the bus driver, as well as other witnesses for appellant, testified that they did not hear any bell or gong sounded by the motorman. But there is no evidence that they listened. To say that the driver of the bus did not hear is as consistent with his not listening as with his listening and not hearing. Tognazzi v. Milford, etc., Street Ry. Co., 201 Mass. 7, 86 N. E. 799, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 309. That the motorman did ring his gong was directly testified to by himself and by passengers on his car. The former, testifying as a witness for plaintiffs, on being asked if he rang his bell, replied:

"All the way up from Sixteenth street I was ringing the gong handle as I always did. * * I rang the gong."

A passenger on the interurban car testified that the car kept on at its regular speed; that he observed it gradually overtaking the bus; that his attention was called to it by hearing the motorman ring his gong twice; and that after hearing this signal he did not suppose the bus would keep on the same way, but that it did. The jurors had the right to believe this testimony of the passenger and also the testimony of the motorman that he rang his gong all the way from Sixteenth street—a distance of nine or ten blocks to the place where the accident occurred. Indeed, from the nature of their verdict we must assume that the jurors did believe this testimony that the gong on the car was sounded. It is just this testimony which presents a situation justifying the conclusion that the servants of both defendants were concurrently negligent—the motorman because he did not slacken the speed of the interurban car and the bus driver because he did not heed the signal to get off the track.

[8] If, as the motorman testified, the gong on the interurban car was rung, then there can be no question as to appellant's liability. For though it may have been more comfortable for the passengers on the bus and for its driver to travel astride the rail because of the street's slope toward the curb, still it was not necessary to occupy any part of the space between the car tracks—there was ample unobstructed space between the curb and the nearest rail along which the bus could have traveled. In going upon the track the bus driver chose the more dangerous part of the street. With more safety to his passengers he could have driven along the southerly side of the boulevard outside of the car tracks. His duty to Mrs. Simmons, as one of his passengers, was to use "the utmost care and diligence." Civ. Code, § 2100. But though he owed to the passengers on his bus the highest degree of care, there is evidence to show that he failed to measure up to the standard of even ordinary care. When he selected the more dangerous part of the highway his care should have been commensurate with the greater danger then assumed. He knew that interurban cars were liable to approach the bus from behind, and as the driver of a vehicle carrying passengers for hire he should have exercised the utmost care to hear the warning signal and to turn off and away from the tracks as soon as the diligence commensurate with the high degree of care which he owed to his passengers would permit. This he failed to do, and his want of due care was a proximate contributing cause of the collision and of the consequent injury to Mrs. Simmons. And though his own contributory negligence would prevent him from recovering for any injuries which he might have sustained, it will not prevent Mrs. Simmons, who was a passenger on the bus, from recovering for her injuries. The negligence of the driver of a public conveyance in which passengers are being carried for hire is not imputable to the passengers. Tompkins v. Clay Street Ry. Co., 66 Cal. 163, 4 Pac. 1165; Doeg v. Cook, 126 Cal. 218, 58 Pac. 707, 77 Am. St. Rep. 171; Field v. Spokane P. & S. R. Co., 64 Wash. 445, 117 Pac. 228; Leavenworth v. Hatch, 57 Kan. 57, 45 Pac. 65, 57 Am. St. Rep. 309; 10 C. J. 969, 970.

[9] If it should be argued that the verdict against the railway company is irreconcilable with any implied finding that the motorman gave timely warning by ringing his gong, the obvious answer is that the mere ringing of the gong would not necessarily relieve the railroad company from blame. The verdict against it, carrying the necessary implication that it also was guilty of negligence, may be accounted for and justified, notwithstanding the motorman warned the bus driver by vigorously sounding the gong. For though the gong may have been rung, and though the bus driver may thus have been charged with the duty to give way to the approaching car, nevertheless the motorman may have been guilty of negligence by failing to decrease the speed of his car in time to avoid a rear-end collision after it became apparent that the driver of the bus was not going to turn off in time to avoid a catastrophe; and it is quite possible that the jury found that such failure to decrease the speed of the interurban car was a contributing cause of the accident, and that for that reason the railway company should be held liable, even though it should be found that the bus was traveling astride of the rail and that the motorman gave warning by sounding his gong. The motorman's negligence in failing to decrease the speed of his car is a question which is presented for our determination on the appeal taken by that defendant, and for that reason it will not be necessary to consider it further here.

[10] Our conclusion is that after making due allowance for all the facts which, by necessary implication, must be deemed to have been found in appellant's favor by reason of the verdict against his codefendant there still was sufficient evidence to support the verdict against him; for the evidence would still tend to show that the bus driver made no effort to heed the signal to turn off the track and away from the zone of danger, but that he heedlessly continued on his course, regardless of the warning afforded by the clanging gong.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J; CRAIG, J.

60 Cal. App. 140

SIMMONS et ux. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al. (Civ. 3883.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 12, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 8, 1923.)

1. Evidence ⟸588—Jurors are not restricted to adoption of theory of one of parties.

In an action for injuries to a passenger in a motor bus, brought against the operator of the bus and the street car company whose car collided with the bus, the jury is not restricted to the adoption of the theory of the accident advanced by the operator of the bus, or of that advanced by the street car company, but can take any view of the facts justified by the evidence, even though thereby it accepts some of the testimony of one defendant and some of the testimony of the other.

2. Street railroads ⟸114(9)—Evidence held to warrant finding of negligent failure to slacken speed.

Evidence held to warrant the jury in finding that a street car motorman negligently failed to slacken speed after he saw a motor bus was not turning from the track in response to his signals.

3. Street railroads ⟸90(5)—Failure of bus driver to leave track does not justify failure to slacken car speed.

Though it is the duty of the driver of a motor bus to turn from a street car track on hearing the signal of a street car approaching behind him, his failure to do so does not justify the motorman in approaching the bus at such a speed that he is unable to avoid colliding with it.

4. Appeal and error ⟸930(4)—Presumption is jury adopted theory justifying verdict, if that was supported by evidence.

Where there is any theory supported by the evidence which would justify the verdict rendered by the jury, the appellate court must assume that the jurors adopted that theory.

5. Carriers ⟸306(4)—Bus passengers can recover against both bus owner and street car company if negligence is concurrent.

Where a collision between a motor bus and an interurban car was caused by the concurrent negligence of the operator of the bus and the street car company, a passenger of the bus can recover from either or both defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by W. A. Simmons and wife against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and Fred Walker. Judgment for plaintiff against both defendants, and the Pacific Electric Railway Company appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 212 Pac. 637.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and W. R. Millar, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This appeal is by the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company, against whom and its codefendant Fred Walker a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for $6,000 was rendered. Appellant is a railway corporation operating a system of interurban electric cars between the cities of Santa Monica and Los Angeles. A part of its route is over Santa Monica boulevard, in the city of Santa Monica. Appellant's codefendant Walker, a carrier of passengers for hire, operates a system of jitneys or auto busses between Santa Monica and Los Angeles. On Santa Monica boulevard, between Twenty-Fifth and Twenty-Sixth streets, an interurban car of the railway company ran into the rear end of a bus operated by a servant of the defendant Walker, and in the collision the plaintiff Florence Simmons, who was a passenger on the bus, received injuries for which the jury awarded the verdict against both defendants. There was evidence to show that the motorman made no attempt to decrease the speed of his car until too late to avoid colliding with the bus. The general facts of the case are stated in the opinion this day filed in the appeal of the defendant Walker from the same judgment.

It is contended by the railway company on this appeal, as it was by the defendant Walker on his appeal that, though the evidence might warrant a verdict against either defendant, it cannot justify a verdict against both. Because each defendant presented a theory of the accident wholly irreconcilable with that advanced by the other, it is claimed that the adoption by the jurors of one of those theories necessarily must exculpate that defendant whose theory the jury so approved and inculpate the other defendant only.

[1] It may be conceded that the railway company would have to be absolved from all blame if the jury accepted its theory of the accident; for according to the testimony of the motorman, the bus turned into the danger zone so suddenly that he did not have time to avoid a collision by any reasonable effort to arrest the speed of his car. But the evidence discloses facts which warranted the jury in espousing a theory of the accident differing in some particulars from that contended for by either defendant—a theory of the facts which absolves neither but inculpates both. The vice of appellant's argument lies in the assumption that the jurors were limited to a choice between but two opposing theories, entirely overlooking a third possible theory—one which makes the servants of both defendants guilty of separate but concurrent negligence contributing to the injury. It matters not that this third theory is supported in part by facts testified to by appellant's witnesses and in part by facts testified to by the witnesses for appellant's codefendant Walker. The jury could take any view of the facts justified by the evidence; and on this appeal we must assume that they adopted that theory which finds support in the evidence and which accords with the verdict.

"In considering as a question of law the relative negligence of plaintiff and defendant, and the conduct of either or both as contributing to the injury, an appellate court will assume that the jury took any view of the facts, justified by the evidence, which tends to support the verdict." King v. Green, 7 Cal. App. 477, 94 Pac. 777.

[2] Witnesses for the defendant Walker gave evidence which warranted the conclusion that the auto bus traveled easterly for three or four blocks "astraddle" the southerly rail of the railway company, followed by appellant's interurban car; witnesses for appellant, passengers on the interurban car, gave testimony which justified the conclusion that, though the bus was at all times in plain view, the motorman did no more than sound his gong, and that, though he thus gave the bus driver timely warning, thereby charging the latter with the duty to turn away from the track, he made no attempt to slacken the speed of the mechanically propelled, ponderous, and unwieldy interurban car until it was too late to avoid an accident. If the jurors found these to be the facts, as well they might, then they were fully justified in finding that the motorman's failure to check the speed of his car before the collision became inevitable was negligence which concurred with that of the bus driver and contributed to the injury. In other words, there not only was evidence to support the conclusion that the bus driver was negligent in that, heedless of the clanging gong, he neglected to turn away from the zone of danger into which he had entered when he drove his vehicle astride the car rail, but there also was evidence sufficient to support the theory that it must have become apparent to the motorman, as a reasonably careful observer, that the bus driver, whose vehicle was straddling the rail, did not intend to heed the warning signal by turning off the track, and that, notwithstanding the motorman's observation of the bus driver's heedlessness, he recklessly permitted his heavy interurban car to gain on the bus, making no effort to slacken speed until the collision was unavoidable.

[3] True, the motorman had the right to expect that the bus driver would heed the warning signal and get off the track. But, notwithstanding such rightful expectation, if the motorman saw that the bus driver would not heed the signal, it then became his duty to make a reasonable effort to check the speed of his car in time to prevent it from catapulting into the bus and injuring its passengers. The motorman's duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid a collision and the bus driver's duty to exercise the highest degree of care to avoid injury to his passengers were reciprocal; and whether the former in his management and control of appellant's interurban car did or did not observe his duty was clearly a question of fact for the jurors, upon whom alone rested the responsibility of determining whether an ordinarily prudent person, circumstanced as was the motorman, and having due regard for the safety of the passengers on the auto bus, observing the bus continuing on its course for several blocks ahead of him and astride the rail would so operate the ponderous interurban car that it could not be stopped in time to avoid a collision in the event that the bus driver should disregard the warning signal to leave the track.

[4] Our conclusions are: First, that the jurors were warranted in accepting that version of the accident which was given by the bus driver and the other witnesses for the defendant Walker, with the exception that the gong on the interurban car was sounded, as testified to by the motorman; secondly, that since this theory of the facts justifies the verdict against both defendants, we, as an appellate court, must assume that that was the theory which the jurors adopted; and, thirdly, that under this theory of the facts the jurors were clearly justified in concluding that, had the motorman been exercising reasonable care, he would have seen that the bus driver was unmindful of the warning signal to leave the track, and that, observing such heedlessness, the motorman, had he been reasonably careful, would have brought the heavy interurban car under such timely control as to be able to stop it before it crashed into the auto bus.

[5] Since, for the reasons we have stated, the jurors were justified in finding that the separate but concurrent negligence of the drivers of both vehicles contributed to the injury of Mrs. Simmons, the latter was entitled to recover from either or both defendants. Tompkins v. Clay Street Ry. Co., 66 Cal. 163, 4 Pac. 1165; Kimic v. San Jose, etc., Ry. Co. 156 Cal. 379, 104 Pac. 986.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 275

MEHESY v. MISSION GARAGE. (Civ. 3689.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 27, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 21, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⊜1010(1)—Court's finding upheld if there is evidence substantially tending to support it.

Whenever it is contended on appeal that a finding by the trial court is not supported by the evidence, the finding must be upheld if there is in the record any evidence substantially tending to support it.

2. Livery stable and garage keepers ⊜6—Evidence held to show want of authority to deliver automobile to third person.

Evidence that an automobile had been stored in a public garage with instructions to the keeper to deliver it only to the owner or his wife, or to some one authorized by the wife, and that it was delivered, without express directions from the wife, to one who had been seen driving it for the wife, and who returned it to the garage after the trip, held to sustain the court's finding that the person to whom it was delivered was not authorized to receive it, even if the burden of establishing the want of authority was on the owner.

3. Livery stable and garage keepers ⊜6—Breach of contract not to let unauthorized person take car is negligence.

A breach by a public garage keeper of his agreement not to let any unauthorized person take plaintiff's automobile is itself a failure to exercise due care to keep the car safely.

4. Livery stable and garage keepers ⊜7—Evidence held to sustain finding car was substantially damaged after being taken from garage.

Evidence that plaintiff's car was in good condition when he left it in defendant's public garage, and apparently in good running order when defendant let an unauthorized person take it, that it was not returned to the garage by such person, but was taken to another garage with the top broken and body smashed up and wheels broken off, is sufficient to sustain a finding that the car was substantially damaged.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by E. Mehesy against the Mission Garage, a corporation, for damages to an automobile. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Swaffield & Swaffield, of Long Beach, for appellant.

David R. Faries, Ivan Kelso, John R. Berryman, Jr., and J. Allen Davis, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action for damages. Defendant, as its name implies, operates what is known as a "public garage." Plaintiff engaged defendant to keep his automobile in its garage when the car was not in use, plaintiff to pay a monthly storage charge or fee for the service to be rendered. The obligation of defendant under the contract between the parties is shown by the uncontradicted testimony of plaintiff, as follows:

"I told him," an employee of defendant, "that I wanted the car left there and no one except myself or my wife or any one that she brings in to drive the car for her when I am not there.

* * * I didn't want anybody else to use that car while I was not using it unless authorized by Mrs. Mehesy or some one with her. I made that statement to Mr. Wooten," the employee.

On a certain occasion, one Baker, a night man then in sole charge of the garage, permitted one Kohler to take the car from the place. It was damaged before its return to the garage, and it was to recover for this damage that the action was commenced. Plaintiff had judgment, and defendant appeals.

[1, 2] The first point made by appellant is that the evidence was insufficient to support a finding of the trial court to the effect, as stated in appellant's brief, "that in breach" of the agreement between the parties "appellant wrongfully permitted Kohler to take the automobile from the garage on the occasion it was damaged." The objection to this finding is twofold, the first assault being upon the ground that "the evidence was insufficient to establish that Kohler was not authorized by respondent to take the automobile from the garage." The point is thus stated by appellant in order to attract attention to its view that the burden of proof was upon respondent to show that Kohler did not possess the authority mentioned, and not upon appellant to show affirmatively that he did possess it. We proceed to discuss the question presented upon the theory that appellant's statement of this rule of evidence is correct. We state by way of premise, however, that, as is the case whenever it is contended on appeal that a finding is not supported by the evidence, the finding now in question must be upheld if there is in the record any evidence substantially tending to support it. What, then, was the evidence? Respondent testified:

"I had not given Mr. Kohler any permission to take the car out. He never had the authority to take it out at any time, and I never told any one at the garage that they might allow Mr. Kohler to take the car out."

As to respondent's wife, who also had authority under the contract of storage to designate persons who might take the automobile from the garage, all the evidence in the record upon the present subject is in the testimony of Baker; neither Mrs. Mehesy nor Kohler having been called to the stand. Baker's testimony shows that he had been employed at the garage but a short time when he first met Mrs. Mehesy. His introduction to her occurred but about two days before he permitted Kohler to take the car from the garage. He was introduced to Mrs. Mehesy by Wooten, who had then left his employment in the garage; Wooten remarking at the time of the introduction that Mrs. Mehesy "was after a driver" for the car. She and Wooten then drove the car out of the place. Later that same night the vehicle was driven up to the garage, Kohler being at the wheel and Mrs. Mehesy sitting on the front seat with him. After a question addressed to Baker, the two drove away. In five or ten minutes Kohler returned with the car, unaccompanied, and put it into its place. About two days later, and upon the occasion when the automobile was taken from the garage and damaged Kohler came to the place alone and asked for the car. Baker permitted him to take it, although he testified:

"When I let Kohler take the car I had no instructions or permission from any one to deliver the car to Mr. Kohler."

We think all this evidence, taken together, furnished substantial support to the proposition that Kohler had no authority to take the car from the garage. The statement of Baker, quoted immediately above, was only his conclusion, it is true; but when it is taken with the other evidence upon the question, all coming from the man who permitted the automobile to be driven from the garage, a situation is presented which is sufficiently clear to us, even though the burden was upon respondent to show that Kohler had no authority to take the car.

[3] The second attack upon the finding now under examination is made under the head, in appellant's brief:

"Assuming, but not admitting, that Kohler was not authorized by respondent, * * * or by Mrs. Mehesy, * * * to take the automobile on the occasion it was damaged, the evidence was insufficient to show that appellant failed to exercise ordinary care in the keeping, care, and preservation of the automobile."

The point now made by appellant is based upon the fact that the trial court found that the engagement of appellant was not to keep respondent's car safely, "except that it is true [that] * * * defendant agreed and undertook to use ordinary care and prudence in the keeping, care, and preservation of said automobile." Upon the assumption with which appellant opens the statement of his point, that is, that Kohler was not authorized to take the automobile from the garage, we do not see how the proposition can be said to possess merit. We cannot perceive that the question of ordinary care can be of interest in the case if Kohler was not authorized to take the car, for when Baker permitted him to take it a plain and simple breach of the contract of storage was committed by appellant, through Baker as its agent, and the fact of the breach was found by the trial court, as already shown. It surely cannot be said that ordinary care is exercised in the keeping of an automobile under such a contract as was made here if that contract is breached by a delivery of the car to a stranger. We have no doubt that the trial court, after finding that the contract required only the exercise of ordinary care by respondent, intended the finding that the contract had been breached as a finding that such care had not been exercised. At any rate, to our minds, the finding so operates. It would be difficult to imagine a stronger case of lack of exercise of such care. It is not to be forgotten, of course, that the opening words of appellant's proposition have ceased to operate merely as an assumption, conceded by appellant only for the purpose of argument, this because of the views expressed by us in the paragraph next preceding the present one.

[4] The only remaining point made by appellant is that the evidence was insufficient to "justify a finding of substantial damages in favor of respondent." Baker testified that Kohler drove the car out of the garage upon the occasion on which it was taken out and damaged. In truth, that he did so is not questioned. This, of course, shows that the car could at least be operated at that time. Also, respondent testified that he left the car at appellant's garage upon the day on which later Kohler took it out and that it was then in good condition. Kohler did not return the car, but the undisputed evidence is that it was on the next day "towed" by other parties into a garage other than that of appellant. Respondent testified that he saw the car when it was being towed in and that then "the top was broken in and the body was smashed up and the wheels broken off." The evidence which we have noted was amply sufficient to show that the car was substantially damaged. The manner in which this point is presented does not justify us in assuming that appellant intends to assail the finding of the trial court as to the amount in dollars in which the automobile was damaged. We are willing, however, because of some things said in arguing the point actually presented, to go so far as to make the assumption. Still we do not feel, considering the nature of the question really made, that it is incumbent upon us to do more than make the assertion that the finding of the court as to the amount of damage is supported by evidence found in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 198

Ex parte KOLB. (Cr. 1098.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 21, 1922.)

1. Habeas corpus ⟸92(3)—Question as to legality of order of commitment to jail held not raised.

Where the sheriff's return to a writ of habeas corpus contained no facts tending to show that the contempt judgment committing the petitioner was void, no question as to the legality of the commitment of petitioner to jail was presented for review, where petitioner interposed no answer to the return or produced no evidence, or the parties made no stipulation that the petition might stand as a traverse.

2. Divorce ⟸200, 289—Decree against husband awarding maintenance to nonresident wife and child held valid.

In an action for divorce by the husband, resident of the state, where the wife, then residing in New York with her minor child, came to California upon being informed of the pendency of the action, an interlocutory decree based on her cross-complaint, adjudging that she was entitled to a decree of divorce and awarding to her maintenance for herself and minor child, but not mentioning or affecting the custody of the child, was valid, being a proceeding within Code Civ. Proc. §§ 367, 395, 1037, and Civ. Code, §§ 138, 139, though the minor child was not brought into this state and though, after the interlocutory decree was entered, the wife returned to New York.

3. Divorce ⟸269(10)—What kind of an affidavit based on information and belief is valid.

When the terms of a court decree have been violated and proceedings are taken to terminate the violations or to punish therefor, as to compel a defendant in a divorce action to comply with the court's decree ordering the payment of maintenance for the wife and child, an affidavit on which such proceedings are based is not invalid, because a part of it was made on information and belief.

Petition by Fred W. Kolb for writ of habeas corpus to be directed to Thomas F. Finn, as sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded.

Emilio Lastreto and A. Bathurst Crane, both of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Jesse H. Miller and Walter H. Linforth, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

R. M. J. Armstrong, of San Francisco, for sheriff.

STURTEVANT, J. [1] Heretofore the petitioner filed a petition in this court asking that a writ of habeas corpus issue, and, pursuant to such a request, a writ was issued and made returnable before the court. Thereafter the writ was served upon Thomas F. Finn, as sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco, and the said sheriff made his return in which he set forth that on the 13th day of November, 1922, he received said Fred W. Kolb under a certain order of the superior court. He then sets forth in words and figures a copy of said order, from which it appears that heretofore an interlocutory decree of divorce was duly and regularly entered in a case in which Fred W. Kolb was plaintiff and Vera A. Kolb was defendant; that said decree was based on the defendant's cross-complaint, and adjudged that the defendant was entitled to a decree of divorce and awarded to the defendant maintenance for herself and minor child; that thereafter, on the 8th day of November, 1922, an order to show cause issued out of the trial court and was served on this petitioner, commanding him to appear and show cause on the 10th day of November, 1922, why he should not be punished for contempt of court for failing to pay the maintenance awarded by the terms of the aforesaid interlocutory decree; that the order to show cause was served on the petitioner, and thereafter the same was heard in open court, and evidence both oral and documentary was introduced; that from the evidence so introduced the court found that the petitioner was, at the time of the hearing, in default in the sum of $100 in the payment of the moneys theretofore directed to be paid; and that it was also found that the petitioner had the ability to pay the sum of $100, and that his failure to pay said sum was willful and deliberate. Then follows the portion of the judgment finding the petitioner guilty of contempt of court and fixing the punishment at five days' imprisonment in the county jail. To the return so made by the sheriff, the petitioner did not interpose an answer, nor was there a stipulation that the petition might stand as a traverse, nor was any evidence produced.

Taking the recitals of the return, it will be noted that no fact is stated which tends to show that the judgment committing the petitioner is void. But, on the record as made, the return is all that is before us. In the case entitled In re Collins, 151 Cal. 340, 342, 90 Pac. 827, 828, 129 Am. St. Rep. 122, Mr. Justice Sloss, writing for the court, says:

"Before proceeding to a consideration of the merits of the application, it may be well to here repeat what was orally stated at the hearing regarding the practice of this court on habeas corpus. The function of the petition is to secure the issuance of the writ, and, when the writ is issued, the petition has accomplished its purpose. The writ requires a return by the officer or other person having the custody of the prisoner. To such return the petitioner may present exceptions, raising questions of law, or a traverse, raising issues of fact, or both. Where the return is not subject to exception—that is, where it sets forth process which on its face shows good ground for holding the prisoner, such process being produced at the hearing (Pen. Code, § 1480), and the traverse alleges matter tending to invalidate the apparent effect of such process—the burden of proving such new matter is on the petitioner. The remarks in In re Smith, 143 Cal. 368, 77 Pac. 180, are to be taken as referring only to the case where, by agreement of the parties and the consent of the court, the petition is treated as a traverse to the return, and its averments are not disputed. The course of treating the petition as a traverse has frequently been followed in this court, but where it is followed it does not require the respondent to file, in addition to the return, a pleading specifically denying the affirmative allegations of the petition (treated as a traverse) nor does it shift the burden of proof as to such allegations from the petitioner to the respondent. To adopt the analogy of pleadings in civil actions, the return is the complaint, the traverse is the answer; new matter set up in the traverse is deemed denied, and must be proved by the party alleging it."

[2] It is patent, therefore, that there is nothing further before this court. However, as a man's liberty is at stake, we have not failed to examine into each question which counsel, by their arguments, assume to be before us. At the time the divorce case was commenced the wife was residing in New York. Upon being informed of the pendency of the action, she came to California, but the minor child was not brought into this state. After the interlocutory decree was entered, the wife returned to New York. It does not appear that the decree purported to give the wife the custody of the minor child. No issue of or concerning its custody is involved. Hence the rule stated in De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, 112 Cal. 131, 44 Pac. 354, is not involved. The decree did award maintenance to the wife and minor child, residents of New York, and such money judgment was rendered by a court of this state against the husband, a resident of this state. Such proceedings do not involve the doctrine of the case just cited, but do come within the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 367, 395, 1037, and Civil Code, §§ 138, 139. If the husband wanted the child brought within the jurisdiction of the court, he could have made such request at the proper time and place.

[3] It was assumed by counsel that the affidavit praying for the issuance of an order to show cause was made by the wife's attorney, and that at least a part of it was made on information and belief. Thereupon it was argued that such a paper is not in legal effect an affidavit. Gay v. Torrance, 145 Cal. 144, 78 Pac. 540. However, that rule is one that has exceptions. One of the exceptions is that line of cases where the terms of a court decree have been violated and proceedings are being taken to terminate the violation or to punish therefor. Hughes v. Moncur, 28 Cal. App. 462, 469, 152 Pac. 968; In re Selowsky, 38 Cal. App. 569, 581, 177 Pac. 301.

[4] Finally it is claimed that, on the hearing of the order to show cause, the testimony showed that the petitioner did not have the ability to comply with the court's order, and that therefore the petitioner should have been discharged. The record does not sustain the contention. The averment of the petition is that the petitioner "had no further funds." It does not appear but what he possessed other properties, real or personal.

It follows that the petitioner should be remanded, and the writ discharged.

It is so ordered.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 225

WELLS FARGO NEVADA NAT. BANK OF SAN FRANCISCO v. HASLETT WAREHOUSE CO. (Civ. 4357.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 26, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 21, 1923.)

1. Customs duties ⊂⊃91—Persons holding receipt from bonded warehouse have notice of control by customs service.

Persons holding negotiable warehouse receipts, which showed on their face that they were issued for goods in a bonded warehouse, are charged with notice that the goods were held subject to the control of the collector of customs, and that the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury prevented the delivery of the goods, except upon presentation of a permit to the storekeepers signed by the collector and naval officer.

2. Customs duties ⊂⊃89—Goods in bonded warehouse are in joint custody.

Goods received in a government bonded warehouse are in the joint custody of the collector of customs and the warehouseman, under Rev. St. U. S. § 2960 (U. S. Comp. St. § 5644), declaring that the proper customs officer and owner of the warehouse shall have joint custody of such goods.

3. Customs duties ⊂⊃53—Rgulations of Secretary have force of law.

The customs regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, issued under the authority given him by Rev. St. U. S. § 2989 (U. S. Comp. St. § 5682), have the force of law.

4. Customs duties ⊂⊃91—Negotiable receipt does not guarantee title of goods, and customs officer could refuse permit.

A bonded warehouseman who issues a negotiable warehouse receipt does not thereby guarantee the title of the person who deposited the goods in the warehouse, but the transfer of such receipt gives the transferee the same rights to the goods as an actual delivery of the goods would give and no more, so that the warehouseman is not liable where a customs officer refused to issue a permit for the withdrawal of the goods upon such receipt, because the person who deposited them therein did not have title to them.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; G. E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by the Wells Fargo Nevada National Bank of San Francisco against the Haslett Warehouse Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Raymond Perry, of San Francisco (John S. Partridge, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Breuner & Erb, C. W. Durbrow, and John Breuner, Jr., all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against it, in an action brought against the defendants to recover $32,507 damages for failure to deliver 100 cases of egg albumen, stored in the defendant's warehouse, for which plaintiff had purchased a negotiable warehouse receipt, for value and without notice of any adverse claims to the goods.

The trial court found that on December 11, 1919, the collector of customs of the port of San Francisco ordered 100 cases of dried egg albumen to be stored as unclaimed goods in Humboldt bonded warehouse, a warehouse owned and operated by defendant as a class 3 warehouse, as classified under and by virtue of the provisions of the customs regulations duly made by the Secretary of the Treasury for the regulation of United States bonded warehouses, and that on or about the said 11th day of December, 1919, defendant received said goods in said warehouse; that on or about the 24th day of December, 1919, the said goods were entered by the said collector of customs in the name of, and as the property of, one T. N. Morris, and that defendant, thereupon, and by virtue of such entry, entered said goods at said warehouse in the name of, and as the property of, said T. N. Morris; that on or about the 6th day of January, 1920, H. W. Gutte & Co. presented to defendant an order for the delivery of said goods to said H. W. Gutte & Co., Inc., duly executed by said T. N. Morris, and on said date defendant issued a negotiable warehouse receipt for said goods to said H. W. Gutte & Co., Inc., and said receipt provided, and it so appeared upon the face of the receipt, that the said goods were received by defendant in storage in said Humboldt bonded warehouse.

On January 7, 1920, Gutte & Co. indorsed and delivered the said negotiable warehouse receipt to Kockos Bros., who purchased the same in good faith and for value, without notice of any fact that might cause it to be dishonored. Kockos Bros., in turn, indorsed and delivered said negotiable warehouse receipt to plaintiff, who purchased it in good faith and for value. On February 17, 1920, plaintiff surrendered said negotiable receipt to defendant in exchange for a nonnegotiable warehouse receipt for the same goods, which nonnegotiable receipt stated that it was given for goods in storage in Humboldt bonded warehouse. On February 17, 1920, the plaintiff gave to Kockos Bros. an order allowing them to withdraw 50 cases of the 100 cases of egg albumen mentioned in the warehouse receipts.

Prior to the issuance of either of the warehouse receipts, to wit, on January 2, 1920, a permit for the withdrawal of said goods was filed by the said T. N. Morris with the said collector of customs, and upon the said withdrawal permit the said T. N. Morris ordered the delivery of said goods to be made to Kockos Bros. On February 18, 1920, Kockos Bros. paid the customs duties upon said goods and the said withdrawal permit was thereupon stamped "Duty Paid," and the United States storekeeper at said Humboldt bonded warehouse was authorized by the collector of customs to release said goods, which authorization was in writing upon the face of said withdrawal permit. On February 18, 1920, the said withdrawal permit together with an order for the delivery of 50 cases of said egg albumen, was presented at the said Humboldt bonded warehouse, and the storekeeper of customs at said Humboldt bonded warehouse, acting under instructions of the said collector of customs, refused to deliver the said 50 cases of egg albumen, or any part thereof.

At the time said documents were presented at said warehouse, defendant had information that plaintiff was not lawfully entitled to the possession of said goods, and that the person or persons lawfully entitled to the possession of said goods were Christenson, Hanify & Weatherwax, a copartnership, or some person or persons for whom the said copartnership was acting. The firm of Christenson, Hanify & Weatherwax was brought into the case by order of court, and the evidence demonstrated its right to the goods as agent of the owner.

Shortly after the 18th day of February, 1920, the said withdrawal permit was surrendered to the collector of customs who, thereupon, refunded the customs duties to said Kockos Bros., and canceled the "Duty Paid" stamp theretofore stamped on said permit, and the collector of customs has issued no further withdrawal permit, either to the said Kockos Bros., or to the plaintiff herein.

The defendant claims no interest in the goods, and is ready to deliver them upon the payment of the storage charges thereon, if the collector of customs will authorize the release of said goods from the said bonded warehouse.

The trial court also found the following facts, which establish the contention relied upon by defendant as a defense to this action: Unless the goods in controversy be released from said bonded warehouse by said collector of customs, defendant is unable and cannot deliver said goods to plaintiff, because said goods are stored, as plaintiff well knew when purchasing the warehouse receipt therefor, in a United States bonded warehouse, and said goods are in the joint custody of defendant and the collector of customs and subject to the exclusive control of said collector with respect to the delivery of said goods and the release of said goods from said bonded warehouse; that defendant issued its warehouse receipts for said goods as and for goods received in said bonded warehouse and that all persons holding or receiving said receipts had notice, by virtue of the provisions thereof and recitals therein, that said goods were in storage in a bonded warehouse and subject to the control of said collector and subject to the rules and regulations, duly made and issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the government and control of bonded warehouses and goods stored therein.

[1-3] Appellant contends that the refusal of the collector of customs to allow defendant to deliver the goods to plaintiff does not release defendant from liability, because plaintiff has been damaged by relying upon the negotiable warehouse receipt issued by the defendant. But it appears from the undisputed facts and from the findings of the trial court that the warehouse receipts showed on their face that they were issued for goods in a bonded warehouse. All persons holding or receiving said receipts had notice, therefore, that the goods were subject to the control of the collector of customs with respect to the release of said goods and subject to the rules and regulations issued by the Secretary of the Treasury for the government and control of bonded warehouses and goods stored therein. Goods received in a government bonded warehouse are in the joint custody of the collector and the warehouseman. The United States Revised Statutes declare that the proper officer of the customs and the owner and proprietor of the warehouse shall have joint custody of the merchandise stored in the warehouse. U. S. R. S. § 2960; U. S. Comp. Stats. § 5644. The Secretary of the Treasury is empowered to establish rules and regulations governing bonded warehouses. U. S. R. S. § 2989; U. S. Comp. Stats. § 5682. The Treasury regulations have the force of law. United States v. Ehrgott (C. C.) 182 Fed. 267, 272. The customs regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury, in so far as they are relevant to the issues of this case, were introduced in evidence. These regulations provide that all goods will be received and delivered by storekeepers or under their supervision, and that goods shall not be delivered from bonded warehouses except upon presentation of a permit to the storekeeper, signed by the collector and naval officer, if any. The case of Bliss v. Carroll (Cal. Sup.) 9 Pac. 88, holds that the indorsee of a negotiable warehouse receipt is bound to take notice of the Treasury regulations and the law applicable to bonded warehouses.

It follows, therefor, that the goods could not be delivered from the bonded warehouse except upon presentation of a permit to the storekeeper, signed by the collector of customs or his authorized deputy. The evidence in the instant case is that the collector, by his deputy, refused to allow the goods to be delivered, and so instructed the storekeeper in charge of the warehouse.

[4] The defendant makes no claim to the goods, and the trial court has found that it is ready and willing to deliver the goods if permitted by the collector of customs to do so. The defendant did not guarantee that the collector of customs would permit the assignees of Morris to withdraw the goods. It merely issued a receipt showing that the goods were actually held by it as the property of Morris. But appellant contends that defendant thereby guaranteed the title of Morris. We think the contention is without merit. To hold that defendant guaranteed Morris' title by issuing to him a negotiable receipt for the goods would mean that if goods were stolen and placed in a warehouse by the thief, and a negotiable receipt issued therefor, a purchaser for value of such receipt could recover from the warehouseman after the real owner had secured possession of his goods. The mere statement of the case demonstrates its unsoundness. Assuredly, the purchaser of a negotiable warehouse receipt representing merchandise can be in no better position than a purchaser receiving actual possession of such merchandise. In the latter case, the purchaser would take no better title than his grantor, except where an estoppel of the real owner was involved, an element that does not enter into the present case. To put the matter more strongly, let us suppose that the defendant and collector of customs had delivered the goods to plaintiff before they had knowledge of the superior claim of Christenson, Hanify & Weatherwax. This latter firm, representing the real owners, as appears by the evidence, in the absence of any facts which would estop it to assert its rights, could have recovered the goods from plaintiff. In such an event, would plaintiff and appellant contend that it could recover damages from the defendant because its delivery of the goods upon Morris' order constituted a guaranty of Morris' title? Assuredly, it could not. Does appellant occupy a superior position because it accepted a receipt for the goods from the defendant, rather than the goods itself? We think not. The transfer of a negotiable warehouse receipt is but a symbolic delivery of the goods called for by it. Widemann Co. v. Digges, 21 Cal. App. 342, 131 Pac. 882. The transfer of such a receipt passes the title to the goods as effectually as if the actual delivery had been made. Widemann Co. v. Digges, supra. But it cannot pass title more effectually than an actual delivery, and, if the defendant would not have been liable to plaintiff in the case of an actual delivery of the goods and a subsequent dispossession by the real owner, it is not liable under the facts presented here.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: STURTEVANT, J.; NOURSE, J.

190 Cal. 364

Ex parte VON PERHACS. (Cr. 2503.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1923. Rehearing Denied March 1, 1923.)

1. Indictment and Information ⊂=110(47)—Complaint alleging reckless driving in statutory language held to be sufficient.

A complaint alleging that accused "did * * * willfully and unlawfully operate and drive a certain motor vehicle upon a public highway," and continuing in the language of the Motor Vehicle Act, § 20, subd. (a), is an allegation of facts sufficient to constitute a public offense, nor is the substitution of the affirmative language "in a reckless manner" for "not careful" a material deviation, it being sufficient if the language of the statute is substantially followed.

2. Highways ⊂=186—Jurisdiction of offenses against Motor Vehicle Law not left to civil court nor motor vehicle department.

The jurisdiction of offenses against the Motor Vehicle Act is not left to the civil courts, nor to the motor vehicle department, and where reckless driving in violation of section 20, subd. (a), has been established, the penalty prescribed by section 32, subd. (a), is properly imposed.

3. Highways ⊂=186—Revocation of licenses for violation of Motor Vehicle Law not intended as sole penalty.

Revocation of the operator's license for violation of the Motor Vehicle Act, as provided by section 22 thereof, is not intended as the sole penalty, particularly in view of section 32, subds. (b) and (c), providing additional remedies.

On Petition for Rehearing.

4. Habeas corpus ⊂=3—May not be resorted to in lieu of demurrer to complaint in misdemeanor case.

Habeas corpus may not be resorted to in lieu of a demurrer to a complaint in a misdemeanor case on the ground of uncertainty, and any defect appearing in the complaint should be remedied by demurrer, or later by a motion in arrest of judgment, as provided for by Pen. Code, § 1452.

In Bank.

Application by L. Von Perhacs for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Sheriff of Tulare County. Writ dismissed, and petitioner remanded.

D. M. Edwards, of Visalia, and J. C. Thomas, of Susanville, for petitioner.

Fred C. Scott, Dist. Atty., and Leroy McCormick, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Visalia, for respondent.

LENNON, J. [1] Petitioner herein seeks his release on habeas corpus after judgment of conviction rendered in the justice's court of Tulare township, county of Tulare. In the justice court of that township petitioner herein was charged with, and upon a trial by a jury was convicted of, a misdemeanor arising out of an alleged violation of the provisions of the state Motor Vehicle Act. The complaint against petitioner charged that he "did on the 1st day of July, 1922, * * * at the county of Tulare, state of California, willfully and unlawfully operate and drive a certain motor vehicle, to wit, an automobile, upon a public highway of said county of Tulare, in a reckless manner, and without due regard for the safety and convenience of other vehicles upon said highway, and the safety of property. * * *" The petitioner herein, defendant there, was sentenced to serve 40 days in the county jail and to pay a fine of $200. Upon appeal to the superior court of Tulare county, the judgment was affirmed.

There is no merit in petitioner's contention that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a public offense. The law does provide such a penalty as is here imposed for the commission of the offense of which the said defendant was convicted. Section 20, subd. (a), of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1919, c. 147, p. 215) provides that—

"The driver or operator of any vehicle in or upon any public highway shall drive or operate such vehicle in a careful manner with due regard for the safety and convenience of pedestrians and of all other vehicles or traffic upon such highway. * * *"

The same section specifically sets forth other rules to be followed in the operation of vehicles on the public highway, as, for instance, the procedure to be followed in passing and overtaking other vehicles on the highway and turning at intersections.

It has recently been held by this court, in the matter of the Application of John H. Murphy, on habeas corpus, 212 Pac. 30, that subdivision (a) of section 20, hereinbefore quoted, "prohibits the operation of vehicles in an unsafe manner. * * *" There is, therefore, a direct provision of the statute which provides that vehicles shall be driven in a careful manner, or, in other words, which prohibits vehicles from being driven in a careless manner without regard to the safety and convenience of others.

[2] The jurisdiction of such offenses is not left, as is petitioner's contention, to the civil courts or to the motor vehicle department. Section 32 (a) of the Motor Vehicle Act provides that—

"Excepting as in this act otherwise provided, or where a different penalty is expressly fixed by this act, any person violating any of its provisions, or knowingly making a false statement or knowingly concealing a material fact or otherwise committing a fraud in an application for the registration of a vehicle, or in an application for an operator's or chauffeur's license, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof, unless in this act otherwise provided, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

The offense in question—reckless driving, as above pointed out—was contemplated and covered by and came within the purview of the provisions of section 20 (a). Petitioner herein, by driving recklessly, was guilty of a violation of that provision of the Motor Vehicle Act, and the penalty provided in section 32 (a) was properly imposed.

[3] The revocation of the operator's license for reckless driving, as provided in section 22 of the statute, was not intended as the sole penalty to be imposed, as is contended by petitioner. On the contrary, the legislative intent to impose an additional penalty for the wanton disregard of the life and safety of others is shown by a review of the Motor Vehicle Act in its entirety and particularly by a consideration of those provisions of that act which provide both directly and by necessary implication for the revocation of an operator's license, not as a substitute for, but as a supplement to, any other penalty imposed. For instance, subdivision (c) of section 32 provides that—

"In addition to any or all other punishments provided in this act and imposed by the court upon any person for violation of any of the provisions of this act, the court may, in its discretion, suspend an operator's or chauffeur's license for a period of not to exceed thirty days, * * *"

Again, section 32 (b) provides that—

"Immediately upon receipt by the department of information * * * concerning the third conviction within one year of any person for the violation of any of the provisions of section twenty-two of this act, the department shall forthwith revoke the operator's or chauffeur's license. * * *"

Obviously, since it is upon information of conviction that the license is to be revoked, the revocation must necessarily have been intended as an additional penalty.

The fact that, in making the charge in the complaint, the exact language of the statute was not used does not, of course, vitiate the complaint. It is sufficient if the pleadings are substantially in the language of the statute, and it is not necessary that the language be followed literally. In re Avdalas, 10 Cal. App. 507, 102 Pac. 674. Practically the only deviation from the words of the statute is the substitution of the words "in a reckless manner" in place of the words "not careful." The only distinction is that the one is stated in a negative and the other in a positive manner. Certainly if petitioner herein was guilty of driving in a reckless manner he was guilty of driving in a manner not careful.

There is some question as to whether the petitioner is charged with the violation of section 20 of the Motor Vehicle Act or section 22 (a) of the same act. The two provisions are practically the same, both providing that vehicles shall not be driven in an unsafe manner. It is therefore immaterial to the petitioner whether he is charged with a violation of one or the other.

The writ is dismissed, and the petitioner remanded to the custody from whence he came.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; LAWLOR, J.; MYERS, J.; WASTE, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; SEAWELL, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [4] The petition for rehearing is denied. Habeas corpus may not be resorted to in lieu of a demurrer to a complaint in a misdemeanor case upon a ground of uncertainty, etc. The defect, if any, in the complaint in the instant case, for failure to specify the particulars of the offense charged, might have been remedied by demurrer, and, if not by demurrer, then by motion in arrest of judgment as provided under section 1452, Penal Code.

WILBUR, C. J., and LENNON, KERRIGAN, WASTE, MYERS, and SEAWELL, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal. App. 252

MONTEVERDE v. SUPERIOR COURT OF SACRAMENTO COUNTY et al.

(Civ. 2576.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 26, 1922.)

1. New trial ⟸2—May be granted where agreed statement of facts does not state ultimate facts, but not where ultimate facts are agreed.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 656, defining a new trial to be a re-examination of an issue of fact, the court has no authority to grant a new trial, where the agreed statement of facts involves a statement of the ultimate facts which might appropriately stand as the findings, but, where the agreed statement is merely of the evidence and not of the ultimate facts, a new trial may be granted.

2. New trial ⟸2—Agreed statement of evidentiary facts presenting controversy did not preclude granting of a new trial.

In an action to recover payments on the purchase price of lots for breach of contract to furnish water for domestic uses and to construct and improve streets and highways, where the agreed statement of facts presented the controversy as to whether the defendant had improved streets in accordance with the contract, and whether its proposed sinking of a well to obtain water would be within its agreement, the determination of such controversy in favor of plaintiff by the court's findings of fact did not preclude the court from granting a new trial.

Application for writ of review to annul any order of the Superior Court of Sacramento County granting a new trial in the action by John J. Monteverde against the Brooke Realty Company, in which the court and Peter J. Shields, Judge, were made respondents. Writ disallowed.

V. L. Hatfield and W. H. Hatfield, both of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Dunn & Brand, of Sacramento, for respondents.

HART, J. The petitioner, by this application for a writ of review, seeks to secure a judgment of this court annulling an order by the respondents granting a new trial in a certain action wherein the petitioner is the plaintiff and Brooke Realty Company, a corporation, is the defendant, and which action was tried by, and is now pending before, said respondents.

The position of the petitioner, as must be inferred from the nature of the relief herein sought, is that the respondents, in making the order herein complained of, acted in excess of their jurisdiction. Section 1068, Code Civ. Proc. The ground upon which the petitioner bases the claim for the relief herein asked is that the notice of intention to move for a new trial, served and filed by the defendant in the action above named, was and is insufficient in law to vest respondents with the power or right to hear, determine, and grant a motion for a new trial in said action. The notice of intention to move for a new trial is in the following form:

"Please take notice that the defendant herein intends to move the court to vacate and set aside the judgment rendered in the above cause, and to grant a new trial of said cause upon the following grounds, to wit: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the judgment. (2) That the judgment is against the law. Said motion will be made upon this notice, the papers on file in this case, and upon the entire record of this action."

Among the grounds specified in section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure, upon which "the former verdict or other decision may be vacated and the new trial granted on the application of the party aggrieved," are: First, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision; second, that the verdict or decision is against the law.

On the return day of the writ, the respondents appeared by their counsel and demurred to the petition on the ground that the same did not state facts sufficient to entitle the petitioner to the relief prayed for in the petition, and also filed the return of the respondents to the writ.

When presenting his petition for the writ herein prayed for, it was the theory of the petitioner that the notice of intention to move for a new trial was insufficient and fatally defective because it stated that the application for a new trial would be based upon the grounds that the evidence was insufficient to justify the judgment and that the judgment was against law, instead of stating that the evidence was insufficient to justify the decision and that the decision was against law, as the above-named section of the Code prescribes. When the case was called for argument, however, counsel for the petitioner stated that they had reached the conclusion that the grounds upon which they relied, as set forth in the petition, were insufficient to justify the granting of a writ of certiorari. In other words, they, in effect, conceded that the notice of intention to move for a new trial to which they had objected was sufficient to vest the respondents with the authority to entertain the motion. See Locke v. Moulton, 96 Cal. 21, 30 Pac. 957. They thereupon abandoned the petition in so far as were concerned the grounds therein specifically set forth as the foundation for the relief asked for. Upon this confession of the insufficiency of their petition to justify the granting of a writ of review, the demurrer interposed by the respondents could and should, of course, be sustained. But counsel for the petitioner at the hearing raised another point involving a challenge of the jurisdiction of the court to grant the motion for a new trial in the action referred to, to wit: That the case of the petitioner against the Brooke Realty Company was tried in the court below upon an agreed statement of facts and that in such case, so the contention was and is, a motion for a new trial cannot be entertained by the trial court. Counsel for the respondents made no objection at the time of the suggestion of this point to the hearing and determination thereof by this court, and we suppose that the failure of the respondents to object to the consideration of the point thus raised may be assumed to amount to a stipulation or an agreement that the ground last stated might be treated as having been included in the petition as among the grounds upon which the petitioner asks for a writ of review herein. A serious question arises, though, whether the point last suggested is one which it is appropriate to consider through the instrumentality of a jurisdictional writ. Obviously, the superior court has jurisdiction to grant new trials upon any of the grounds stated in section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure. A question which might here suggest itself is whether the action of the court in granting the new trial does not involve, if anything at all as against the legal propriety of granting the motion, error rather than an excess of jurisdiction, the same being correctable through appeal, the ordinary remedy in the course of law. However, since the question was argued on both sides and submitted for decision we will consider the point. To do this, it will be necessary first to examine briefly the record in the action in which the new trial was granted as the same is disclosed by the return to the writ.

It is shown by said return that, previously to the institution of said action by the petitioner, the assignor of the latter and the Brooke Realty Company, a corporation, entered into two written contracts, each bearing the same date, whereby said company sold to the said assignor of petitioner two several lots in a subdivision known and designated as "Sacramento Heights," in the county of Sacramento. The agreed aggregate price of the lots was to be paid for in certain specified monthly installments. By a certain provision in each of said contracts, the seller obligated itself to "pipe or cause to be piped," within two years from the date of the agreements, water in sufficient quantity for domestic purposes "along the street or alley adjoining the herein described premises, or furnish water immediately upon notification in writing of the completion of a dwelling house by the vendee; and also to construct, grade, and improve the streets and highways in said subdivision." Claiming that the seller (Brooke Realty Company) had breached the provision of the agreements thus referred to, the petitioner brought the said action to recover the amounts paid by his assignor on the lots described in the agreements, together with interest thereon. The complaint was founded upon the theory of money had and received. The answer specifically denied all the material averments of the complaint.

The agreed statement of facts upon which the case was tried and decided consisted mainly of documentary evidence, viz.: The contracts of purchase and letters passing between the parties in which the vendee complained that the seller had failed to perform those terms of the agreements contained in the provision above mentioned, and the vendor maintained that it had lived up to the agreements in all respects or intended to do so—that is, as to the furnishing of water to the premises for domestic use, it would sink a well thereon for that purpose in lieu of piping water thereto, and that, as to the improvement of the streets, etc., it had improved and graded the same as required by the agreement. A statement of the character and the extent of the improvement of the streets by the vendor was embraced in the agreed statement The specific findings were in accord with the allegations of the complaint, and the court further found: "That all of the allegations of the answer are untrue." The conclusions of law were in harmony with the findings. The foregoing statement of the record in the action between the petitioner and the Brooke Realty Company is sufficient for the purposes of the decision of the question presented.

Section 656 of the Code of Civil Procedure defines a new trial to be "a re-examination of an issue of fact," etc. The contention of the petitioner is that, since the action above referred to was tried and decided solely upon an agreed statement of the facts, no issue as to the facts was raised or submitted for decision and that, therefore, there is no issue of fact to be re-examined in said action. The consequence is, so the argument goes, that, where a trial court in such a case entertains a motion for a new trial and assumes to act in such proceeding, it transcends its lawful authority or jurisdiction. In support of their position, counsel for the petitioner cite the following cases: Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 52, 36 Pac. 364; Stanwood v. Carson, 169 Cal. 647, 147 Pac. 562; Quist v. Sandman, 154 Cal. 748, 99 Pac. 204, and Kaye v. Superior Court, 33 Cal. App. 269, 270, 164 Pac. 912.

In Gregory v. Gregory the cause was tried upon a stipulation of the facts, and the trial court drew its conclusions of law from the facts so stipulated. The Supreme Court held that findings of fact were not necessary; that the facts stipulated, being the ultimate facts, were themselves sufficient to stand as the findings. In Stanwood v. Carson, the findings consisted of all the facts embraced in the agreed statement of facts. That case went to the Supreme Court on an appeal from the judgment and from the order denying a new trial. No question of the jurisdiction of the trial court to entertain a motion for a new trial was therein raised, and the judgment and the order were affirmed.

In Quist v. Sandman the case was tried, not only upon an agreed statement of facts, but upon stipulation that the facts so agreed upon were to be considered as the findings of the court in the case, and they were so treated. In Kaye v. Superior Court the court adopted the agreed statement of facts as its findings.

[1, 2] There can be no doubt that where an agreed statement of facts involves a statement of the ultimate facts and as such may appropriately stand as the findings a motion for a new trial after decision upon such statement would not and could not be entertained. And that is the situation we find in the cases above named. In this case, however, the so-called agreed statement of facts is in truth an agreed statement of the evidence and not a statement of the ultimate facts. Under the agreed statement here there existed a controversy between the parties to the action as to whether or not the defendant therein had improved streets in accordance with the terms of the contracts and whether, by sinking a well to obtain water for the domestic uses of the premises, as the defendant said that it proposed to do, in the place of piping the water thereto, it would remain within the terms of the contracts. The latter proposition might be said to be a question of law for the court to determine upon a construction of the contracts, but it cannot be doubted that whether the defendant had fulfilled the terms of the contract as to the improvement of the streets was a question of fact for the court to determine from the evidence, from which either of two opposing inferences might reasonably be drawn. The court did determine this fact by its findings, which do not, however, as in the cases above mentioned, embrace the stipulated facts in extenso. Nor, as in said cases, were the conclusions of law drawn directly from the agreed statement of facts. The case here falls within the doctrine of the following named cases: Crisman v. Lanterman, 149 Cal. 647, 654, 87 Pac. 89, 117 Am. St. Rep. 167; Southern Pacific Land Co. v. Dickerson (Cal. Sup.) 204 Pac. 576. In Crisman v. Lanterman it is said:

"As has been stated, the cause was tried upon an agreed statement of facts, and it is claimed by the appellants that, where the facts are agreed, no findings are necessary, and that, if findings are made, they are entitled to no weight. There have been several rulings by this court to the effect that the want of findings affords no ground for reversing a judgment where the facts have been agreed upon. Gregory v. Gregory, 102 Cal. 50, 36 Pac. 364; Muller v. Rowell, 110 Cal. 318, 42 Pac. 804. But here the facts embraced in the stipulation were not the ultimate facts put in issue by the pleadings, but were (as to the question of consent) a recital of the circumstances surrounding the sale, from which the ultimate fact of consent is, as is claimed, inferable. If those circumstances would support an inference either way, it was not only proper but necessary that the trial court should make a finding of the ultimate fact. Such finding when made is entitled to the same weight as any other finding on conflicting evidence, and will not be overthrown unless the facts stipulated cannot by any reasonable inference support the conclusion reached by the trial court."

But the case of S. P. L. Co. v. Dickerson seems to go even further in the statement of the rule as to the proposition in hand than does the case of Chrisman v. Lanterman. In the former case it is said:

"Where there is an absence of conflict, the question of right of recovery is one of law, to be passed upon by the court only (Herbert v. S. P. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 229, 53 Pac. 651), and in such a case the proper procedure is for the court, upon motion, to withdraw the question from the jury by granting a nonsuit or directing a verdict (O'Connor v. Mennie, 169 Cal. 217, 146 Pac. 674; Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 155 Pac. 631; Estate of Sharon, 179 Cal. 447, 177 Pac. 283). However, when an issue has been dealt with as an issue of fact and submitted to the jury for decision, and a single, general verdict returned, our Code of Civil Procedure recognizes one method only for obviating the binding effect of the resulting verdict; i. e., upon a motion for a new trial the verdict may be set aside if, at the same time, a new trial is granted. Our statutes provide no other means for the correction of any error that may have been committed in submitting an issue to the jury. The argument that a new trial could not have been granted, for the reason that a new trial is a 're-examination of an issue of fact' (Code Civ. Proc. § 656), and there was no issue of fact in this case by reason of the absence of conflicting evidence, is specious. Subdivision 6 of section 657 of the Code of Civil Procedure authorizes a new trial upon the ground of 'insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict,' which has been interpreted as applying not only to cases where the verdict is contrary to the weight of the evidence, but where there is no evidence to support the verdict. Estate of Bainbridge, 169 Cal. 166, 170, 146 Pac. 427; Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 155 Pac. 631. When the determination of an issue has been intrusted to a jury, it has, for the purposes of the trial, become an issue of fact, and if it is later discovered that the question should have been passed upon by the court instead of the jury, the mistake can be rectified only by ordering a 're-examination' of what has previously been treated as an issue of fact."

Of course, there can be no distinction as to the application of this doctrine as between a case tried by a jury and a case tried by the court. Where the court itself tries a case without the aid of a jury (we refer to a case at law as distinguished from a case in equity), the former in legal effect becomes the jury.

We conclude that the writ herein prayed for should be disallowed and, accordingly, the demurrer to the petition is sustained and the order to show cause discharged.

FINCH, P. J., and BURNETT, J., concurred.

60 Cal. App. 273

In re CATE. (Civ. 3999.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 27, 1922.)

1. Attorney and client ⊂⊃61—Belief that attorney is sufficiently punished is no ground for reinstatement.

The disbarment of an attorney is not intended as a punishment but is a measure for the protection, in a certain sense of the profession, and in a higher sense of the public, and therefore a belief that an attorney had been sufficiently punished is no ground for his reinstatement as a member of the bar.

2. Attorney and client ⊂⊃61—Disbarred attorney must produce evidence of reformation to be entitled to reinstatement.

Before an attorney, who was disbarred for professional misconduct, can be reinstated, he must produce evidence of facts showing a reformation and which indicate that he is worthy of the confidence of the public, and mere statements in letters by lawyers and others that they believed he had reformd, unaccompanied by any facts and not supported by oath, except the professional oath of the lawyers, are insufficient.

3. Attorney and client ⊂⊃61—Judgment disbarring instead of merely suspending will not be lightly set aside.

Where the court had, under Code Civ. Proc. § 299, the option of suspending an attorney instead of disbarring him, because, though he had pleaded guilty of a felony, his disbarment was asked on other grounds, the order of disbarment indicated a choice by the court which heard the accusation from which an appeal could have been taken, and will not be lightly set aside in a proceeding for the reinstatement of the disbarred attorney.

4. Attorney and client ⊂⊃61—Application for reinstatement of disbarred attorney is not application to vacate disbarment.

Though a proceeding by an attorney who has been disbarred to be again enrolled as an attorney of the court is popularly called a proceeding for reinstatement, it is really an application for an admission to the bar, not an application to vacate the order of disbarment, and should be considered as if it were an application for admission by one who came from another state.

5. Attorney and client ⊂⊃61—Application for reinstatement of disbarred attorney denied for lack of evidence of reformation.

An application for reinstatement of an attorney who had been disbarred for misconduct, including embezzlement of funds of a client, supported only by letters from his employers and from attorneys stating a belief he had reformed, without any statement of facts showing such reformation, will not be granted, especially where he made no attempt to return the money embezzled by him until after his first application for reinstatement had been denied, and then only upon the advice of counsel.

Original application by Clyde E. Cate for reinstatement as a member of the bar. Application denied.

Vincent B. Vaughan, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Norman S. Sterry and G. R. Crump, both of Los Angeles, for respondent Los Angeles Bar Ass'n.

WORKS, J. Petitioner was admitted to the bar on June 14, 1912, at the age of 21. He pursued the even tenor of his way as a practicing lawyer for several years, nothing appearing in the record here to have affected his professional integrity or standing until January 31, 1917, on which date an accusation was filed against him with the grievance committee of respondent bar association. From that date forward his troubles came thick and fast. Other charges against him were filed with the same committee on March 23, June 7, and August 20, 1917, and March 8, 1918. All of these matters were investigated by the committee, and a report in each of them adverse to petitioner was made to the bar association. Some of the charges resulted in findings by the committee that petitioner had been guilty of unethical conduct, while it was found in others that he had embezzled the money of his clients. On February 1, 1918, a criminal complaint was filed in the superior court against petitioner, charging him with the embezzlement of $600 while acting as the agent of a certain party. This charge appears not to have been connected with any of the matters covered by the various accusations made to the grievance committee. Petitioner pleaded guilty to the charge, was admitted to probation, and was later discharged. On April 27, 1918, an accusation praying the disbarment of petitioner was filed in the superior court, the proceeding being based on two of the charges which had been presented to the grievance committee. A judgment of disbarment followed in May or June, 1918. On June 1, 1921, an application was presented to Division 1 of the Court of Appeals of this district, praying the reinstatement of petitioner as a member of the bar, but the petition was denied for the reasons stated in the opinion of the court. In re Cate (Cal. App.) 201 Pac. 964. The present application for reinstatement was filed July 10, 1922.

Ever since his disbarment, petitioner has been under the employment of the Standard Oil Company at its Fresno branch, except that, as indicated by a letter in the record, he voluntarily gave up his place with that company on May 15, 1922, to take a position with the Hudson Automobile Company. Petitioner's uprightness in his employment with the Standard Oil Company is attested by letters and petitions signed by employees of the company. There is nothing in the record before us, however, to show the character of that employment, except that his petition and several of the documents accompanying it contain the general statement that it was one of trust and confidence. We are unable to determine from this statement to what extent petitioner has been subjected to temptation in his employment, to what extent he has been relieved of it by the surveillance or control of superiors, or whether he has been put "to the test necessary to purge him of the taint of his old wrongdoing and to satisfy us and the public generally that he would made a faithful and trustworthy practitioner at the bar." In re Stevens (Cal. App.) 210 Pac. 442.

[1] The signers of several of the letters and petitions which accompany the present application for reinstatement ask that petitioner be granted the relief he prays, for the reason that he has been punished sufficiently by his disbarment, adjudged, as it was, four years before the filing of his application. Such a consideration can in no way affect the merits of the application. It was said in a proceeding similar to this that—

"In one or two of the affidavits in the record the statement is made that the petitioner has been punished enough, as if a disbarment were punitive in character. It is not. The removal of an attorney's name from the rolls of the profession is a measure protective in character; in a certain sense protective of the profession, but in a higher sense protective of the public which finds it necessary to resort to the services of lawyers." In re Shepard, 35 Cal. App. 492, 170 Pac. 442.

See, also, 6 C. J. 581; People v. Meyerovitz, 278 Ill. 356, 116 N. E. 189; In re Rouss, 221 N. Y. 81, 116 N. E. 782; In re Kerl, 32 Idaho, 737, 188 Pac. 40, 8 A. L. R. 1259.

[2] In addition to the letters and petitions from employees of the Standard Oil Company, petitioner's reinstatement is advocated by letters from five lawyers, by a petition from 23 members of the Fresno County Bar Association, and by a petition from nine business men of Fresno. These letters and petitions, including those from the Standard Oil Company's employees, are based in the main upon the "belief" of the signers that petitioner has learned a valuable lesson from his disbarment and that, if reinstated, he will conduct himself with propriety in the future. None of these documents comes to us under the sanctity of the oath of a single signer, except that it may be said that the letters and petitions presented by lawyers, "all of whom were morally bound by their oaths as attorneys at law not to recommend a disbarred attorney for reinstatement in the courts of their state unless they were satisfied of the rehabilitation of his character" (In re Thompson, 37 Cal. App. 344, 174 Pac. 86), are so sanctified. It was also said in the opinion last cited, that when a reinstatement is asked by one resting under a judgment of disbarment "his request cannot be granted except upon some formal showing of a reformation of character." In their ordinary cases between man and man, attorneys understand that they must produce evidence in order to prevail. Such being the necessary rule in litigation in which purely private interests are arrayed against each other, it can surely be no less important to require that evidence be produced in support of an application for the reinstatement of a disbarred lawyer. In such matters every member of the legal profession has a deep interest, but the interest of the general public therein is immeasurably greater. In truth, whether the legal profession is to be maintained as an honest and honorable calling is a matter of grave general concern.

"No one not a lawyer can fully realize the opportunities for undiscovered peculation, graft, and embezzlement which are afforded the practitioner at the bar. No one not a lawyer can so understand the degree to which the public is entitled to protection from dishonesty in the profession." In re Shepard, supra.

That these matters are fully appreciated by the courts is evident from the frequency with which petitions for reinstatement have been denied in this state of late years, during which, it is true, the number of disbarments themselves has substantially increased. We call attention to a list of opinions in cases in which reinstatements have been refused: In re Shepard, supra; In re Thompson, supra; In re Cate, supra; In re Collins (Cal. Sup.) 206 Pac. 990; In re Stevens, supra. The terms upon which applications for reinstatement will be considered favorably are shown in the following cases in which reinstatements have been allowed: In re Treadwell, 114 Cal. 24, 45 Pac. 993; In re Burris, 147 Cal. 370, 81 Pac. 1077; In re Mash, 39 Cal. App. 548, 179 Pac. 897. Light is cast on the subject, also, by the text which is found in 6 C. J. at page 615. We cannot say that all these authorities are strikingly illuminative of the point to which we attempt to attract attention. We do say, however, from a consideration of all of them, that no disbarred attorney can be reinstated in his old place in the profession except upon a showing of facts, aided perhaps by affidavits or even letters of well-known persons, particularly lawyers and judges, expressing a conviction, based on a statement of facts, that the petitioner for reinstatement has reformed, and all demonstrating that he is fit to reassume the ermine which he has already polluted. Without a statement of facts, affidavits and letters are of slight, if any, value. We quote from a few of the authorities language which illustrates the principle which it is our desire to inculcate, with such explanatory remarks as we deem necessary in order to present them intelligently to the profession, and to those who have once been of the profession, but who have been found wanting and who may ask that purging which is implied in a readmission to its ranks. Italics used in these quotations, except as otherwise noted, are ours: One Treadwell was disbarred by an order of date April 2, 1885. In an opinion filed August 13, 1896, the Supreme Court said:

"An application is now made in behalf of Mr. Treadwell by E. B. and George H. Mastick, attorneys of this court in good standing, asking that he be restored to said roll of attorneys. The sworn petition shows that continuously since the first day of January, 1887, Mr. Treadwell had been in the employment, as general assistant and confidential managing clerk, of the law firm composed of these petitioners and the late W. C. Belcher. * * * It states: 'That during the nine years which have elapsed since said Treadwell entered their employment, as aforesaid, petitioners have reposed in him the most implicit confidence, and have given him the management of matters of great importance, requiring the utmost care, secrecy, and good faith, and have intrusted to him large sums of money and property belonging to themselves and others.'"

After quoting further from the petition the court said:

"It is further shown that the money, the appropriation of which caused the disbarment of Treadwell, has been by him fully refunded and repaid to those entitled thereto."

After referring to exhibits which accompanied the petition, the court further remarked in passing on the merits of the application:

"An order or judgment of disbarment is not necessarily final or conclusive for all time, and does not preclude the court for good cause from setting it aside and restoring the delinquent attorney."

And a quotation was made from the opinion in an English case to the effect that—

"Both on principle and precedent, sentences of exclusion from * * * the profession need not necessarily be exclusions forever."

The court then ordered a reinstatement. In re Treadwell, supra. In another case in which a reinstatement was asked, there being no opposition, the Supreme Court filed but a short opinion, saying, in the course of it, however, that the order of disbarment—

"was made more than ten years ago upon a charge * * * involving no criminality, and no serious wrong to any one, though inexcusable in itself."

A reinstatement was allowed. In re Burris, supra. In a late case, in which a reinstatement was refused, we said, after referring to the matter which had occasioned the disbarment of the petitioner, the italics being in the opinion there rendered:

"We have no doubt * * * that the public, remembering the offenses of petitioner, would be shocked at his restoration to the legal profession except upon such a complete and conclusive showing of reform on his part as would convince the general mind that, if reinstated, he would discharge his every duty as a lawyer with an unswerving fidelity. Such considerations must be of controlling moment in every such proceeding as this. Not only must members of the profession be people of integrity, but the public must know, if possible, that they are people of integrity. Not only must the bar be entitled to the respect and confidence of the public, but it must, if possible, actually enjoy that respect and confidence. * * * Having these precepts in mind, we could not reinstate any disbarred attorney at law if the general public could entertain any just doubt, upon the showing of reformation and regeneration made by him, whether the standing of the profession were not lowered by his return to its ranks." In re Stevens, supra.

In the same case we said, after mentioning certain affidavits presented by lawyers and judges in behalf of petitioner:

"These lawyers and judges give us no facts upon which we can be reasonably certain that, if petitioner were reinstated, he would be faithful to the sacred trust which is reposed in every attorney at law."

It is said in 6 C. J. at page 615, the italics being ours:

"An order or judgment of disbarment is not necessarily final, or conclusive for all time, but an attorney who has been disbarred may be reinstated, on motion or application, for reasons satisfactory to the court. * * * The decisive question on such an application is whether the applicant is of good moral character in the sense in which that phrase is used when applied to attorneys at law, and is a fit and proper person to be intrusted with the privileges of the office of an attorney. * * * The proof must be sufficient to overcome the court's former adverse judgment of the applicant's character."

[3] We have been at much pains to refer to these matters and to make these quotations, and all because of an apparent lack of appreciation of the serious nature of a judgment of disbarment. We cannot but be impressed with the fact that the courts are confronted with an undue number of applications for reinstatement, especially when we consider the brief period of time which usually elapses between a given judgment of disbarment and the application for reinstatement which is quite likely to follow it. In passing upon such applications, we are bound to consider, it is true, the possibility that every wrongdoer may reform (In re Mash, supra; In re Stevens, supra); but we are not bound to believe that true reform is wrought in short periods of time. Further, we are not bound to pronounce solemn judgment upon the mere faith of friends and acquaintances of applicants that reform has been accomplished. Something more than the faith of kindly disposed friends is necessary. However kindly disposed we ourselves may be, we are neglectful of our duty if we allow reinstatements except upon evidence of reform. We have lately said that one who has been disbarred for grossly immoral conduct—

"should not be reinstated in the ranks of the legal profession except upon the most clear and convincing, nay, we will say upon overwhelming, proof of reform." In re Stevens, supra.

That this position is justified will appear, if, in addition to all we have said above, we attend for a moment to the law of this state upon the subject of disbarments and suspensions. With the one exception provided by the statute; that is, where the person sought to be disbarred has been convicted of a felony, it is optional with a court exercising jurisdiction in a disbarment proceeding to frame its judgment in accord with the gravity of the offense charged. An order of suspension, instead of an order of "permanent" disbarment, may be made. Code Civ. Proc. § 299; Bar Association v. Cantrell (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 968. The court had that option in the instance of the present petitioner, for, although he had pleaded guilty to the commission of a felony, his disbarment was asked on other grounds. The court determined that an order of suspension was not adequate to the moral delinquencies of petitioner, and an order of disbarment followed. Yet we are now asked to pronounce a judgment which will operate in effect to make the order of disbarment but an order of suspension. Such is, of course, the effect of every order for a reinstatement. A choice between suspension and disbarment being allowed by the statute to the court to which an accusation for disbarment is addressed, and, moreover, it being possible that an appeal may be taken from the judgment pronounced by such a court (see In re Riccardi, 182 Cal. 675, 189 Pac. 694), it must of necessity follow that a judgment of disbarment will not be set aside lightly, even in a proceeding for the reinstatement of the disbarred individual.

[4] Proceedings of this nature are generally styled proceedings for reinstatement, but they are only popularly so called, for it has been determined that they are really but applications for admission to the bar, and cannot in strictness be treated as applications to vacate the order of disbarment. In re Mash, supra; Danford v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 193 Pac. 272. We therefore must consider the present petition as if it were an application for an admission by one who came to us from a sister state, with the record as a lawyer there similar to the record which petitioner established when he was a member of the bar here. Can it be conceived that one presenting himself with such a record of unenviable achievement in another state could be welcomed to the bar of California upon the meager showing of rehabilitation of character which is made by the present petition and its accompanying letters and petitions? We cannot ourselves conceive the possibility of such an outcome.

[5] We must refer to one matter which to our minds casts light upon the question whether petitioner's character really has been reformed; in fact, upon the question whether even now he appreciates the serious nature of his past misdeeds as a lawyer. Up to the time, one year ago, when Division One of the Court of Appeals of this district passed upon petitioner's earlier application for a reinstatement, he had made no attempt to reimburse certain persons who had been the victims of his misappropriation of funds, persons who were among those who had made complaint against petitioner to the grievance committee of respondent bar association. Not only so, but attempts in that direction which he has since made have been undertaken at the prompting of the counsel who represents him in this proceeding, and not from the spontaneous pricking of his own conscience. Petitioner acknowledges that he owes the persons in question at least $200. He is now unable to locate them, and they are finally to be deprived, as it appears, of the right to their money. An earlier attempt to reimburse them might have been successful, and petitioner might thus have made partial amends for the wrong he did in the particular instance in question, but his delay in attempting to make restitution appears to have perpetuated the original wrong. Such a condition of affairs comes far from deserving our commendation.

It is our duty to scan carefully every application of a disbarred attorney for reinstatement. It is our duty to acknowledge the possibility that every wrongdoer may reform, and to allow a reinstatement in every case in which a genuine reform is shown, yielding some consideration to petitions for reinstatement purely from the standpoint of the petitioner, but viewing them more broadly from the standpoint of the rights and needs of that public which deserves an adequate protection from the grafts and peculations of dishonest lawyers. Our duty goes no further.

"When a member of the profession has been found lacking in the requisites which go to make him a helper to his clients, and has been discovered to possess aims, views, and purposes which indicate a moral obliquity in him, and which might make his clients his victims, it is well that he were removed from the possibility of doing them harm. When he has been once disbarred, a mistaken charity should not restore him to his position. That restoration should only come when he has lived long enough after his disbarment in honorable intercourse with his fellow citizens to demonstrate that he is both tried and true." In re Shepard, supra.

Petition denied.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 244

HENRY v. WILLETT et al. (Civ. 2481.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 26, 1922.)

1. Venue ⊂⊃77—Absolute right to change of venue may be waived.

While the right of a defendant to a change of venue in a proper case is absolute, such right may be waived.

2. Partnership ⊂⊃213(1)—Complaint construed as one against defendants as individuals, and not within statute providing for suit against association by common name.

Where the caption of the complaint states that defendants do business under a certain firm name, but the body of the complaint alleges defendants "now are, and during all the times herein mentioned were, engaged in and doing business in S. county, Cal., and are now engaged in the building," etc., and the caption of the summons is the same as that of the complaint and is addressed to defendants as individuals, the action is clearly against defendants individually and is not within Code Civ. Proc. § 388, providing that, when two or more persons associated in any business transact such a business under a common name, the associates may be sued by such common name.

3. Associations ⊂⊃20(1)—Action against individuals under firm name held not within constitutional provision authorizing suit in county where breach of contract occurred.

An action against individuals under their firm name to recover for money due for labor and services, brought in the county where the labor and services were performed and not in the county where defendants were resident, held not within Const. art. 12, § 16, providing that an association may be sued in the county where the contract is made or is to be performed or where the obligation or liability arises or the breach occurs or in the county where its principal place of business is situated; the action being personal in character.

4. Venue ⊂⊃77—Motion for change held not abandoned by filing subsequent motions.

Where a hearing on motion for a change of venue was set for a certain day but no dispcsition of the matter was made on such day and no postponement was entered, that subsequent motions were made setting the matter for hearing on other days did not constitute an abandonment of the original motion.

5. Courts ⊂⊃80(1)—Court rules cannot control or be substituted for statutory provisions as to procedure.

Rules of court cannot be invoked to control or be substituted for statutory provisions as to procedure.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; C. J. Luttrell, Judge.

Action for money due for labor and services by W. P. Henry against Walter M. Willett and P. L. Burr, doing business under the firm name of Willett & Burr. From an order denying a motion for change of venue, defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions.

John D. Murphy, of Oakland, and Taylor & Tebbe, of Yreka, for appellants.

Jacob P. Wetzel, of San Francisco, and Collier & Collier, of Yreka, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an appeal from an order denying a motion by the defendants for a change of the place of trial of the above-entitled action.

The action was brought by the plaintiff to recover from the defndants the sum of $525.96 alleged to be due the former from the latter for labor and services performed.

The complaint alleges that the defendants now are, and during all the times mentioned in the complaint were, engaged in and doing business in Siskiyou county, Cal., "and are now engaged in the grading, building and constructing of a road between Happy Camp and Cottage Grove, for the government of the United States"; that the defendants, through their superintendent and agent, E. R. Miller, on or about the 13th day of June, 1921, employed the plaintiff to perform work and labor on the road then being constructed in Siskiyou county, and in pursuance of said employment the plaintiff performed work and labor for a period of 93 days, and that said work and labor were reasonably worth $6 per day; that the plaintiff performed other services for the defendants in road construction for which the latter agreed to pay him the sum of 65 cents per yard, amounting in the aggregate to the sum of $100.75; that defendants have failed and refused to pay the plaintiff said money or any part thereof except the sum of $50.

Summons and a copy of the complaint were duly served on the defendants in the city and county of San Francisco by the sheriff of said city and county on the 18th day of October, 1921.

The defendants appeared by filing a demurrer on the 2d day of November, 1921. With the demurrer was served a notice of motion for a change of the place of trial from Siskiyou county to the city and county of San Francisco. There were also filed at the same time a demand for a change of the place of trial, affidavits by the defendants Walter M. Willett and P. L. Burr, deposing that they were at all times mentioned in the complaint residents of the city and county of San Francisco, an affidavit of merits, notice of motion for a change of place of trial, and an affidavit showing that all the foregoing papers were regularly and duly served on the 1st day of November, 1921, upon Jacob P. Wetzel, one of the attorneys for said plaintiff, at Yreka, Siskiyou county, the place of residence of said Jacob P. Wetzel.

The notice of the motion for an order changing the place of trial from Siskiyou county to the city and county of San Francisco stated that said motion would be called for hearing on the 14th day of November, 1921, at the hour of 10 o'clock a. m. on said day "or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard." On said day, when said motion was called for hearing, in pursuance of the notice given, there was no appearance on behalf of the defendants, and no action whatever was taken upon the application. The minutes of the court of November 14, 1921, as to this motion, following title of court and cause, merely show this:

"Monday, November 14, 1921. This being the time noticed for motion for a change of place of trial of the above entitled action, the matter was regularly called on the court calendar by the court and there was no appearance on behalf of defendants."

Thus it will be noted that the court omitted to continue the hearing of said motion to any definite or certain date or time or to take any action thereon.

On the first calendar day thereafter, which was the 3d day of December, 1921, counsel for the defendants moved the court for an order changing the place of trial of the above-entitled action to the city and county of San Francisco, "on the grounds theretofore set forth in the notice of motion and the demand and affidavits of residence theretofore filed and fixed for hearing, on November 14, 1921." Counsel for plaintiff at no time filed counter affidavits or otherwise made any showing in opposition to the granting of the motion except in objections orally made at the time the proceeding was heard to the hearing or granting of said motion for these alleged reasons: That no continuance of the hearing of the motion on the 14th day of November, 1921, had been made by the court, and that the motion noticed for hearing on said date had been abandoned by defendants, and that there had been no motion noticed for the 3d day of December, 1921. No action was taken by the court upon the motion made at that time. Thereafter, and on the 7th day of December, 1921, counsel for the defendants filed and served on counsel for the plaintiff a notice of motion to change the place of trial of said action, fixing the time for the hearing of said motion for Monday, the 13th day of December, 1921, at 10 o'clock a. m., "or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard." Said notice recited that said motion would be made upon the affidavits and demand for a change of place of trial theretofore served upon the attorneys for plaintiff, upon a written notice of motion setting said hearing for the 14th day of November, 1921, and that the same would be made upon the grounds stated in the original notice, demand, and affidavits as follows, to wit: That the said defendants Willett and Burr were not at any of the times mentioned in the complaint residents of the county of Siskiyou, but that at all said times were residents of the city and county of San Francisco, etc.

When the matter came up for hearing on the 13th day of December, 1921, in pursuance of the notice of motion last above referred to, counsel for the plaintiff renewed their objections to the hearing of the motion upon the same grounds upon which they objected to the hearing of the motion which had been fixed for hearing on the 7th day of December, 1921, and added this further objection:

"That another motion in this action for the change of the place of trial of this action from the superior court of Siskiyou county to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, on the same grounds as stated in defendants' last motion, is now pending and undetermined in this court, and that this court has no jurisdiction to hear or consider this motion."

It was also, in effect, objected that the court lost its right to entertain the motion because said motion was not fixed for hearing and presented on one of the regular law days which are designated as such by the rules of the superior court of Siskiyou county. On the 16th day of December, 1921, the motion and the objections to the consideration thereof by the court were taken up for hearing and argued by the respective counsel, and on the 1st day of March, 1922, the court rendered its decision denying said motion. The order of the court denying the motion reads as follows:

"The motion of the defendants in the above-entitled action for an order changing the place of trial of said action from the above-entitled court to the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco, made in this court on the 3d day of December, 1921, and also the motion of said defendants in said action for an order changing the place of trial of said action from the above-entitled court to the superior court of the state of California in and for the city and county of San Francisco, made in this court on the 13th day of December, 1921, are this day denied without prejudice, and said defendants are and each of them is hereby given permission to renew said motion for a change of the place of trial in said action if they, or either of them, be so advised."

The respondent has not filed any brief in support of the order from which this appeal is prosecuted, nor was he represented when the case was called for oral argument before this court. We do not know whether the failure of counsel for the respondent to file a brief supporting the order complained of by the appellants or to appear before this court and argue the case orally when it was regularly called for such hearing is to be taken as an abandonment of the case by respondent or an assumption on the part of counsel that the order appealed from is so obviously impregnable against successful attack as to require no argument to support it. At any rate, we are without enlightenment upon the views of counsel for the respondent as to the theory upon which they expect the order to be sustained, if, indeed, they have entertained any such expectation. But, from the nature of the objections urged against the hearing of the several motions, as they are recorded in the transcript before us, we may well assume that the theory of the respondent was and is that the failure of the defendants to appear either in person or by counsel in the court below on the day originally fixed for the hearing of the motion to present and urge said motion amounted to an abandonment thereof and that said failure is equivalent to a waiver of their right, if any they have, for a change of the place of trial from the superior court of the county of Siskiyou to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. There was no objection made in the court below to the moving papers themselves or any question raised as to the sufficiency thereof. The sole objection to the hearing of the motion was that the court had lost jurisdiction to entertain the same for the reason that the motion as originally noticed was not pressed by counsel for the defendants, the latter not being present in court on the 14th day of November, 1921, the day fixed in the notice for the hearing of the motion. In other words, the contention seems to be that the defendants exhausted or waived their right to move for a change of venue because of their failure to press their motion on the day on which it was originally fixed for hearing.

[1] It may first be remarked that it is thoroughly settled that the right of a defendant to a change of venue in a proper case is absolute, but that such right may be waived. Authorities need not be cited upon this proposition.

[2-4] Although the caption of the complaint states that the defendants do "business under the firm name of Willett & Burr," the action is clearly against the defendants individually. The body of the complaint, as will be observed, alleges that the defendants "now are, and during all the times herein mentioned were, engaged in and doing business in Siskiyou county, Cal., and are now engaged in the building and constructing of a road," etc., and that the plaintiff was employed by them through E. R. Miller, their superintendent. The caption of the summons is the same as that of the complaint and is addressed to "Walter M. Willett and P. L. Burr, defendants." It is clear that the action does not come within the terms of section 388 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Davidson v. Knox, 67 Cal. 143, 7 Pac. 413; Feder v. Samuel Epstein et al., 69 Cal. 456, 10 Pac. 785; Maclay Co. v. Meads, 14 Cal. App. 363, 372, et seq., 112 Pac. 195, 113 Pac. 364. Nor (if, in point of fact, the defendants constitute an association and as such engaged in doing the business mentioned in the complaint) does the action as it is made by the complaint come within the provisions of section 16 of article 12 of the Constitution. The action is personal in character, and the defendants, unless the objections urged in the court below against their motion are legally sound, are entitled to an order changing the place of trial of the action from Siskiyou county to San Francisco. We are of the opinion that there is no merit in the objections urged against the entertainment of the motion. While it is true that the record indicates that there were several attempts at the presentation of the motion as originally filed for a change of the place of the trial of this action, as a matter of fact, and in legal effect, there was but one motion, to wit, the motion noticed for the 14th day of November, 1921. The other so-called motions merely involved a revival or the pressing of the original motion. No other moving papers were filed than those originally filed and served and the proceeding was conducted entirely upon said papers. The fact that the defendants kept alive their original motion and persisted in having it heard and determined by the court is, of course, indubitable evidence that there was no intention on their part to abandon the motion or waive their right to an order changing the place of trial to the county of their residence. The case of McNeill & Co. v. Doe, 163 Cal. 338, 125 Pac. 345, is altogether different from the case at bar. In that case the defendant had regularly filed and served his motion for a change of the place of trial, but the trial court denied the same on the ground that "the original and supplemental affidavits of merits were radically defective in essential particulars." Subsequently, the "defendant again served a notice and demand for the change of the place of trial, both on the ground of his residence in Tulare county when the suit was commenced, and the further ground of the convenience of witnesses, filing therewith an affidavit of merits addressed to both grounds." The trial court, upon hearing said motion, denied the same. The defendant appealed from the last order, and the Supreme Court, in upholding the same, said:

"The appellant here was required to make his motion for the change when he filed his demurrer and he did so, but as his affidavit of merits was entirely insufficient within the plain requirements of the law, the court properly denied his motion. He accepted this ruling as correct, as it undoubtedly was, and it was conclusive of any right to subsequently renew his motion on his own initiative and on the same ground. His right to move ended with that denial. Hence, when he made the third motion on the same ground of residence in Tulare county, the court properly denied it, as his right to move in that respect was exhausted with the denial of his original application."

In this case, though, the court had not passed upon the motion. On the day originally fixed for the hearing, the matter of the motion, as the minutes of the court disclose, was not disposed of. It was not even postponed for hearing to a further date. The subsequent so-called motions were, as above stated, merely notices of the intention of the defendants to present and press the motion as originally made, and there is, obviously, no ground for holding that the defendants, in such a situation, exhausted their right to proceed with the motion or that the court was without jurisdiction to hear and determine it.

In Bohn v. Bohn, 164 Cal. 532, 129 Pac. 981, a motion for a change of venue was denied on the ground "that the notice of motion was insufficient in that no time of hearing was designated in said notice of motion, and on the further ground that no sufficient service of notice of motion had been given." The Supreme Court on appeal upheld the action of the trial court in denying the motion, but, among other things, had this to say:

"It is suggested that, if sufficient notice had not been given, the court below should not have denied the application for change of venue, but should have deferred action to enable the defendant to give a proper notice. This would, no doubt, have been a proper course, if the defendant had requested it. But, instead of so requesting, he persisted, in the face of the objection of want of notice, in presenting his motion. * * * It may be, too, that a denial of the motion for want of notice would not be a bar to a subsequent motion upon proper notice. But the question of defendant's right, if seasonably asserted, to renew his motion, is not involved here."

See, also, Lundy v. Lettunich (Cal. App.) 195 Pac. 451.

What the Supreme Court first suggested in the above excerpt from the Bohn Case would be the proper course is substantially what the defendants did in this case.

[5] As to the objection to the hearing of the motion on the ground that it was not made on a regular law day, fixed by the rules of the superior court of Siskiyou county, the answer is that the rules of the courts cannot be invoked to control or be substituted for statutory provisions as to procedure. Bohn v. Bohn, supra.

The order appealed from is reversed, with directions to the trial court to make and enter an order granting the motion of defendants for the change of the place of trial as indicated in their moving papers.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

(60 Cal. App. 263)

PEOPLE v. COLLINS. (Cr. 669.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 27, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 21, 1923.)

1. Forgery ⊜44(½)—Evidence held to support verdict of guilty.

Verdict of guilty in a prosecution for forgery held amply supported by evidence.

2. Indictment and information ⊜110(15)—Forgery indictment in statutory language sufficient.

An indictment for forgery is sufficient where it is in the language of the statute (Pen. Code, § 470).

3. Criminal law ⊜568—Forgery ⊜44(1)—Intent to do wrongful act provable by extraneous circumstances; signing other's name to check without authority held evidence to defraud.

Intent to do a wrongful act is always provable by extraneous circumstances—that is, by some physical act or acts which with sufficient clearness disclose the operation of the mind with respect to the wrongful act—and the fact that accused without authority signed to a check names of the officers of a company is itself conclusive evidence that his intent was to prejudice or damage or defraud the company.

4. Criminal law ⊜301—Refusal to allow withdrawal of plea of not guilty in order to demur held not abuse of discretion.

Though it would generally not only be the proper but the just course to be adopted by the trial court, where the defendant, having no counsel at the time of his arraignment upon an information or an indictment, enters a plea of not guilty thereto, to set aside such plea upon the motion of the defendant before the trial is begun, for the purpose of enabling him to demur to the pleading or move to set it aside upon any grounds prescribed by the statute, the refusal to do so held not an abuse of discretion where, if the demurrer had been interposed, it would have been the duty of the court to overrule it; the indictment being sufficient.

5. Indictment and information ⊜110—Indictment not quashed on ground that accused not permitted to testify before grand jury.

Though Pen. Code, § 919, provides that a grand jury may receive none but legal evidence, section 920 expressly declares that, in the investigation of a charge against a party, a grand jury is not bound to hear evidence for the defendant, and hence an indictment will not be set aside on the ground that accused was not permitted to testify before the grand jury.

6. Indictment and information ⟸10, 137(4)— Indictment not set aside on ground grand jury based indictment on incompetent evidence; statute excludes other grounds for setting aside indictment, than those specified.

The express enumeration in Pen. Code, § 995, of the grounds upon which an indictment or information may be set aside necessarily excludes all other grounds or reasons for setting such pleading aside; and an indictment cannot be quashed because grand jury based indictment on incompetent evidence.

7. Forgery ⟸34(8) — Indictment and proof held not subject to charge of variance.

The contention that there was a variance between the indictment and the proof, in that check alleged to have been forged by defendant was that of the El Dorado Water Company, whereas the indictment alleged that the defendant forged said check with the intent to defraud the El Dorado Water Corporation, held not tenable where the El Dorado Water Company was taken over by the El Dorado Water Corporation, and the latter continued to use the blank printed checks formerly used by the water company and said checks, when signed by the proper officers of the El Dorado Water Corporation, constituted legal demands against said corporation, and were so recognized by the bank upon which they were drawn, notwithstanding that the name El Dorado Water Company was printed thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

John L. Collins was convicted of forgery, and appeals. Affirmed.

John L. Collins, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant was charged by an indictment returned by the grand jury of the county of El Dorado with the crime of forgery, and upon trial therefor before a jury was found guilty of the crime as so charged. The specific charge is that the defendant, with the felonious intent to prejudice, damage, and defraud the El Dorado Water Corporation, a corporation organized, etc., did, on the 17th day of June, 1922, make, forge, and counterfeit a certain check for $200, payable to the order of John L. Collins, and which purported to be a check drawn upon the El Dorado County Bank of Placerville, and to have been signed by said corporation, and R. W. Hawley, the general manager, and O. P. Fitch, the secretary-treasurer. He made a motion for a new trial, and the same was denied, and he thereupon was sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison, whereupon he gave notice of an appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order denying him a new trial. The defendant, who does not claim to be an attorney at law, himself conducted in his own behalf all the proceedings following the verdict of guilty returned against him, and also prepared his own brief on file in this court, and appeared personally before the court, and orally argued the cause. He advances a number of points upon which he claims that he is entitled to a reversal of the judgment and the order. After a careful examination of these points we have been convinced that there is no merit in any of them. We will therefore give each brief consideration only, and will take up, out of order, the assignment that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. In stating the facts, it will be understood, of course, that they are as they were shown by the evidence at the trial.

[1] The defendant appeared in the city of Placerville some time in the latter part of May, and was introduced to R. W. Browne, assistant secretary of the El Dorado Water Corporation, as the representative of a Mr. Hess, between whom and said corporation a contract had been entered into whereby the former was to construct a dam for the corporation on Webber creek, in El Dorado county. The defendant was introduced to Mr. Browne as "Judge Gordon." He remained in Placerville until about the 10th of June, 1922, and during most of that period of time was in and about the offices of the corporation—in other words, made his headquarters in said offices.

It appears that prior to March, 1922, the El Dorado Water Corporation had been known as the El Dorado Water Company, and that the funds of said company were deposited in the Placerville bank above referred to. The printed checks of said company at that time contained the name of the El Dorado Water Company. Some time in said month of March the El Dorado Water Corporation was organized as a corporation under the laws of the state of California, and thereupon the El Dorado Water Company was transferred to said corporation. The evidence shows that the corporation known as the El Dorado Water Company was never dissolved, but that it was turned over to the El Dorado Water Corporation as the holding corporation of said company. It also appears from the evidence that, after the transfer of the El Dorado Water Company to the El Dorado Water Corporation, the latter continued to use, as a matter of convenience when making payments out of the funds of the corporation in the said bank, the printed checks of the El Dorado Water Company. The witness Browne, as assistant secretary of the corporation, had charge of the check book and, generally, the business of issuing checks for the corporation. He stated that his custom was to prepare checks, when vouchers were presented, in pen and ink, and then take them to Mr. R. W. Hawley, the general manager, and O. P. Fitch, the secretary-treasurer, to be countersigned. He further stated that he often left the check book on his desk. He would do this, so he stated, only when he was to be temporarily absent from his office, and there was no one in the office whom he had reason to believe was untrustworthy; that, subsequently to the departure of the defendant from Placerville it was discovered that a number of the blank checks were missing from the check book. These were numbered 1388, 1389, 1390, 1433, 1434, and 1435, each of said checks having printed upon it the words "El Dorado Water Company."

The check which is set out in the indictment as having been forged by the defendant bears the number 1435, and it was declared by the officers of the water corporation testifying in the case to be identical in all respects, so far as the printed words thereon and the size and character of the paper are concerned, with the blank checks contained in the check book of the corporation. In this connection it may be stated that the witness Browne testified that the defendant "was shown the courtesy of the office and was often seated in the swivel chair at the desk where the check book was kept in the daytime, and there were times when I left the office and he had access to the check book." He added that the defendant had an opportunity to remove the missing checks from the check book, and could have done so. The part of the check indicating the amount for which it was issued, in the place of having been made out in ink, was filled in by means of a protectograph, and it was stated by the officers of the corporation that there was no protectograph in the office of the corporation on the date on which the check was apparently issued. The name "John L. Collins" in the check was typewritten, and one of the officers of the corporation testified that the character of the typewriting was the same as that produced by a typewriting machine in his office during the period of time that the defendant made his headquarters at the company's office. Both Fitch and Hawley positively testified that they did not attach or subscribe their signatures to the check in question, and that they did not authorize any one to do so.

R. K. Blanchard, chief engineer and assistant secretary of the Neptune Meter Company, manufacturers of hydraulic apparatus, in New York City, who is a resident of said city, testified that the defendant came to the offices of the establishment with which the witness was connected in New York on the 27th day of June, 1922, and, introducing himself as the purchasing agent and assistant general manager of the El Dorado Water Company of Placerville, Cal., after some negotiations, signed a contract with said meter company through the witness for a large quantity of water meters; that on July 6th the defendant presented the check in question to the witness and requested him to cash the same. The witness examined the check and discovered that there was a striking similarity in the style of the signatures of Hawley and Fitch, and, having previously had his suspicion aroused as to the validity of the defendant's contract for the meters, refused to cash the check for its full amount, and gave the defendant $20 only, and retained the check. The witness identified the check in question as the one which was presented to him by Collins as above explained.

There is other testimony in the record tending to show the guilt of the defendant as charged in the indictment, but it is not necessary to recite the same or state the substance thereof herein. It is sufficient to say that a careful examination of the testimony as the same is presented here has left no doubt in our minds that the verdict is amply supported.

Such of the remaining points as we conceive should be given consideration will now be noticed in the order in which the defendant presents them in his briefs.

1. It is first contended that the court was without jurisdiction to try the defendant, because, as he asserts, the crime for which he was extradited (he having been arrested in New York) is not the crime charged in the indictment and of which he was convicted. It is argued that the law of the country is that a person who is a fugitive from justice from a certain state, and domiciled in another state, cannot be extradited from the latter state for a certain crime alleged to have been committed in the demanding state and then put upon trial in the latter state upon an entirely different charge. Assuming, but not conceding, that such is the law, the difficulty in the way of considering the point here is that it is not made to appear in the record that the defendant was prosecuted for and convicted of a different offense from that for which he was extradited.

[2, 3] 2. The objection that the indictment does not state a public offense is without foundation. We will not undertake to follow the criticisms directed by the defendant against that pleading. It is sufficient to say that it is in the language of the statute (section 470, Pen. Code), and is in every particular sufficient in the statement of the crime of forgery as it is defined by the section just named. In this connection we may suggest that the contention of the defendant that the mere intent to injure and defraud a person is not and cannot be a crime is excusable on the ground that the defendant is himself not a lawyer, and perhaps to no extent versed in the law, and is therefore unable to perceive how the mere intent to do a wrong, without committing the wrong itself, can be made a crime. The difficulty which appears to confront the defendant, though, as we judge from his briefs, is that he is unable to see how the intent to do a wrong, which is, of course, always hidden within the impalpable human mind, can be proved. But the obvious answer to this proposition is that the intent to do a wrongful act is always provable by extraneous circumstances —that is, by some physical act or acts which, with sufficient clearness, disclose the operation of the mind with respect to the wrongful act. In this case, for instance, the fact that he, without authority, signed the names of the officers of the water company to the check is itself evidence, quite conclusive, that his intent was to prejudice or damage or defraud the water corporation.

[4] 3. The complaint that the court erred in refusing the application of the defendant, made before the trial of the case, to be allowed to withdraw his plea of not guilty theretofore entered, so that he could demur to the indictment, and also move to quash or dismiss it, is without legal force. In other words, while it would generally be not only the proper, but the just, course to be adopted by the trial court, where the defendant, having no counsel at the time of his arraignment upon an information or an indictment, enters a plea thereto, to set aside such plea upon the motion of the defendant before the trial is begun for the purpose of enabling him to demur to the pleading or move to set it aside upon any ground or grounds prescribed by the statute, yet, in this case, we find no justification for holding that the court abused its discretion in refusing to allow the motion of the defendant to withdraw his plea. We have already shown that the indictment contains a sufficient statement of the offense of forgery under the statute. Even, therefore, if the demurrer had been interposed, it would have been the duty of the court to overrule it, and, consequently, it would involve a clear miscarriage of justice to send the case back upon the ground that the court had refused to permit the defendant to withdraw his plea in order to enable him to file and present his demurrer.

[5-6] As to the defendant's proposal or desire to move to dismiss or set aside the indictment, the record itself is not clear as to the ground upon which he intended to press the motion. The affidavits upon which the motion to set aside the defendant's plea was based merely state that the defendant was not permitted to appear before the grand jury and give testimony regarding the charge which that body was investigating as against him. In the briefs, however, the defendant declares that it was his purpose to move to quash the indictment on the ground that the grand jury based the indictment herein on incompetent testimony, contrary to the terms of section 919 of the Penal Code, providing that—

"The grand jury can receive none but legal evidence, and the best evidence in degree, to the exclusion of hearsay or secondary evidence."

The answer to the first proposition is to be found in section 920 of the Penal Code, which expressly declares that, in the investigation of a charge against a party, "the grand jury is not bound to hear evidence for the defendant." The second proposition is, as stated, suggested in the briefs only, and, while it is not here presented in a form to be reviewed, it may nevertheless be observed that section 995 of the Penal Code expressly sets forth the grounds upon which an indictment may be set aside, and an indictment cannot be set aside for any other reasons than those mentioned in said section. The express enumeration of the grounds upon which an indictment or information may be set aside necessarily excludes all other grounds or reasons for setting such pleading aside. The fact that a grand jury may receive incompetent evidence against a person against whom it has found an indictment, or has based such indictment, either wholly or in part, upon incompetent evidence, does not constitute one of the grounds enumerated in section 995 upon which an indictment may be set aside. People v. Fealy, 33 Cal. App. 605, 613, 165 Pac. 1034. See, also, cases cited therein.

4. It appears that before the indictment herein was found and returned by the grand jury a complaint or deposition was filed in the justice's court of the township of Placerville charging the defendant with the crime herein charged, and a warrant thereupon issued for his arrest. The defendant contends that, this course having been adopted in the first instance, it was the duty of the authorities to take him before the magistrate before whom the deposition was filed, and by whom the warrant was issued, and there subject him to a preliminary examination; that, because of the fact that the district attorney so proceeded in the first place, the grand jury was without authority to investigate his case and return an indictment against him, and therefore the indictment was not valid, and was wholly insufficient to clothe the superior court with jurisdiction to try him. Of course there is absolutely nothing in this point. We notice it merely because the defendant, who, as stated, is not an attorney at law, devotes many pages of his brief to the consideration of the point.

[7] 5. It is contended that there is a variance between the indictment and the proof, in that the check alleged to have been forged by the defendant is that of the "El Dorado Water Company," whereas the indictment alleges that the defendant made, forged, and counterfeited said check with the intent to prejudice, damage, and defraud the "El Dorado Water Corporation." Indeed, the same contention applies to the indictment itself, since the check, as pleaded, upon its face shows that it was that of the El Dorado Water Comapny, while the indictment charges that it was wrongfully signed and issued by the defendant for the purpose of prejudicing the El Dorado Water Corporation. The contention is untenable. As we have shown, the officers of the corporation testified that, after the El Dorado Water Company was taken over by the El Dorado Water Corporation, the latter continued to use the blank printed checks which had been theretofore used by the former. In other words, said checks were, as a matter of convenience, appropriated by the El Dorado Water Corporation to its uses and purposes in the transaction of its business, and, when signed by the proper officers of the El Dorado Water Corporation, constituted legal demands against said corporation, and were so recognized by the bank upon which they were drawn, notwithstanding that the name "El Dorado Water Company" was printed thereon.

There are other points made by the defendant which are equally as untenable as those above considered. It would be a waste of time to give them specific attention herein. We are satisfied from an examination of the entire record that the defendant was accorded a fair and impartial trial, that, as above declared, there is plenty of evidence, direct and circumstantial, to sustain the verdict, and that there is no meritorious ground upon which an interference with the judgment and the order, or either, may be supported.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

(60 Cal. App. 271)

PEOPLE v. COLLINS. (Cr. 670.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 27, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 21, 1923.)

1. Criminal law ⟸1081, 1144(19)—Notice of appeal held indefinite, but assumed that defendant intended to appeal from judgment and denial of new trial.

Where a defendant tried upon a charge of forgery was found guilty by jury, and thereafter judgment regularly pronounced against him, and after denial of his motion for new trial gave notice of "an appeal to the appellate court," the appellate court cannot determine from such notice of appeal whether the judgment or the order only or both were appealed from; but, since defendant was not an attorney, and conducted his own defense, it will be assumed that he intended to appeal from both judgment and order denying new trial.

2. Forgery ⟸44(½)—Evidence held sufficient to sustain conviction of forgery.

Evidence in a prosecution for forgery held sufficient to support judgment of conviction.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

John L. Collins was convicted of forgery, and appeals. Affirmed.

John L. Collins, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

HART, J. The defendant, who is also the defendant in Cr. 669 (212 Pac. 701), in which an opinion affirming the judgment and the order has this day been filed, was charged by an indictment found and returned by the grand jury of El Dorado county with the crime of forgery, as follows:

That on or about the 10th day of June, 1922, in the county of El Dorado, state of California, he "did then and there willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, falsely, and fraudulently, and with intent to prejudice, damage, and defraud Placerville National Bank, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States of America, make, forge and counterfeit a certain check in the words and figures following, to wit:

" 'Atlanta, Ga. Jun. 2, 1922 192

" 'No. 25792 $100.00.

" 'The Fulton National Bank, 64-7: Pay to the order of David J. Gordon one hundred dollars dollars.

" 'To The National Park Bank, New York, N. Y.

" 'Garrett C. Evans, Asst. Cashier.'

"And having indorsed on the back thereof the words 'D. J. Gordon,' and he, the said John L. Collins, well knowing the same to be false and forged, did, on said 10th day of June, A. D. 1922, at said county of El Dorado, state of California, willfully, unlawfully, feloniously, falsely, and fraudulently, and with intent to prejudice, damage, and defraud the said Placerville National Bank, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States of America, utter, publish, and pass the same as true and genuine to said Placerville National Bank, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States of America, contrary," etc.

[1] The defendant, having been tried upon said charge, was found guilty by the jury before whom the cause was heard, and thereafter judgment of sentence was regularly pronounced against him. He made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and he thereupon gave notice of "an appeal to the appellate court." From this it cannot be determined whether his intention was to appeal from the judgment or the order only, or from both, but, inasmuch as the defendant himself conducted the proceedings in the court below occurring after the judgment of sentence was pronounced, and is not an attorney at law, we assume that his intention was to appeal both from the judgment and the order denying him a new trial, and we will so regard his notice of appeal.

[2] The evidence showing when and for how long a period of time and under what circumstances the defendant appeared and remained in the city of Placerville is in substance recited in the opinion of People v. Collins, Cr. 669, this day filed in this court. The record herein further shows: That the defendant, during the period of time he remained in Placerville, maintained a deposit account with the Placerville National Bank in said city in the name of "D. J. Gordon"; that, on the 10th of June, 1922, the day on which he departed from Placerville, he presented the check set out in the indictment, with the name D. J. Gordon indorsed on the back thereof, to Mr. Bordwell, the cashier of said bank; that the latter, in effect, cashed said check by delivering to the defendant travelers' checks for the sum of $100, which, as seen, was the amount the check in question called for, and made the said bank liable for the travelers' checks "by giving credit to our New York correspondent for it," immediately depositing the funds to cover said checks in the New York bank.

Garnett C. Evans, assistant cashier of the Fulton National Bank at Atlanta, Ga., by which bank the check in question purports to have been drawn, issued, and delivered to the defendant, testified that it was within the sphere of his duties to sign and issue checks for said bank. He stated that the figures indicating the number of the check (25792) do not correspond with the numbers on the checks issued by the bank of which he is assistant cashier; that the number of the checks of said bank begin with "6,000 and up"; that the bank with which he is connected does not issue or use the type of check set out in the indictment; that he is the only person by the name of Evans who is connected with said bank; that he did not sign the check in question, and that the signature "Garrett C. Evans" subscribed to said check is not in the handwriting of any person connected with said bank. He testified that the National Park Bank, of New York, was a correspondent of the Fulton National Bank, and that the two banks transact business with each other.

There is evidence of other facts and circumstances than those above narrated which is corroborative of the theory of the prosecution that the defendant without authority, and wrongfully, signed the name of Evans to the check and passed the same on the Placerville National Bank with the intent to defraud the latter institution. With the exception of the point that there is a fatal lack of correspondence between the allegations of the indictment and the proof, the legal propositions advanced herein are precisely the same as those advanced in support of the appeal in People v. Collins, Cr. 669, supra. There is therefore no call for consideration of those points in this opinion, and we refer to case No. 669 as authority against the contentions of the defendant with respect to said points.

The judgment and the order are affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 234

WHITEMAN v. ANDERSON-COTTONWOOD IRR. DIST. et al. (Civ. 2522.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 26, 1922.)

1. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃228¾, New, vol. 17A Key-No. Series—Irrigation district a public agency not liable for negligence of agents, in absence of statute.

An irrigation district organized under the Wright Act or California Irrigation District Act must be deemed a public agency created for a public purpose, and is not subject to an action for damages resulting from the negligence of its officers or agents, in the absence of a statute expressly imposing such liability.

2. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃228¾, New, vol. 17A Key-No. Series—No statutory liability for negligence of agents of irrigation district.

An irrigation district organized under the Wright Act or California Irrigation District Act is not made liable by any statute for negligence of its officers or agents.

3. Waters and water courses ⊂⊃228¾, New, vol. 17A Key-No. Series—Complaint held insufficient to disclose cause of action against trustees of drainage district for wrongful death.

A complaint for the wrongful death of a minor child, brought against an irrigation district on the ground of negligence of the agents of the district in leaving sacks of cement on a highway, whereby the automobile in which decedent was riding was overturned, held not to state a cause of action against the individual trustees, who did not participate in nor encourage the act of negligence that resulted in the injury nor have any knowledge thereof, whatever negligence existed being the result of the acts of subagents or employees of the district.

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; C. J. Luttrell, Judge.

Action for death of a minor child, brought by J. F. Whiteman against the Anderson-Cottonwood Irrigation District and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. P. Johnson and James T. Matlock, both of Red Bluff, for appellant.

Carr & Kennedy, of Redding, for respondents.

BURNETT, J. The action was for damages for the death of a minor son of plaintiff, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendants. The portions of the amended complaint necessary to an understanding of the contentions of the parties are as follows:

"That on the 1st day of March, 1918, about the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., the said Roy W. Whiteman was being driven with due and proper care in a Ford automobile by one Jesse Selvester in a southerly direction, along and over that certain public road and highway, in the county of Shasta, state of California, known as the Anderson-Redding road and highway. * * * That the defendants and each of them on the said 1st day of March, 1918, by their agents and servants, wrongfully, carelessly, and negligently left and voluntarily permitted to remain in and upon said road and highway, in said supervisor district No. 1, certain sacks of cement and material for construction work, thereby obstructing said highway, by leaving said sacks of cement in and upon said road and highway, and negligently suffered said sacks of cement and material to remain thereon and thereover, obstructing said highway and road, during the nighttime of said day; and to remain thereon and thereover, without any protection, or fence or light, or signal, or anything else to indicate danger, or give notice to travelers, along and over said road and highway, against accident; that by reason of said negligence, carelessness, and improper conduct of the defendants, and each of them, by their said agents and servants, in the nighttime of said day, while the said Roy W. Whiteman, was lawfully traveling on, and being driven over said road and highway * * * the said Jesse Selvester and the said Roy W. Whiteman, and each of them being then and there wholly unaware of danger, was without fault or negligence on their part, driven against the said pile of cement and material, and thereby overturned said automobile, and the same falling on the said Roy W. Whiteman, pinning him to the ground, and that said automobile caught on fire, by reason of being so overturned, and was totally destroyed by said fire, and that the said Roy W. Whiteman died while being burned in said fire, from said automobile."

The defendants Anderson-Cottonwood Irrigation District and W. F. Smith, A. J. Shields, G. H. Nutting, W. H. Brown, and Charles Hampton, the directors thereof, demurred to said amended complaint upon the grounds that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against said defendants, or either of them; that said district was improperly joined as a party; that it "is uncertain in that it does not appear therein and cannot be ascertained therefrom wherein these defendants or any of them were careless or negligent in the premises" and, also, how the machine "was overturned, or caught on fire, or was destroyed by fire as the result of any negligence, or carelessness, or improper conduct of these defendants or any of them; or that the death of Roy W. Whiteman was the result of any negligence or carelessness or improper conduct of these defendants, or any of them."

The demurrer was sustained in the following order:

"It is therefore hereby ordered that the demurrer of said defendants to said amended complaint be, and the same is hereby, sustained, and said plaintiff is given 10 days to serve and file a second amended complaint in said action."

The plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment was thereupon entered for said defendants, from which the appeal has been taken.

The position of the respondent irrigation district, in support of the general demurrer, "is that, being a public corporation, an action does not lie against it, in the absence of a statute expressly imposing liability, for a private injury resulting from negligence on the part of its agents or servants," and as to the directors, "that they are not liable in an action of tort to a stranger for the negligence of their 'agents and servants,' unless they failed to use ordinary care in selecting such agents and servants, which is nowhere alleged in the complaint."

On the other hand, appellant claims:

"That an irrigation district, while in a sense a public corporation, is engaged in work not governmental in character, but for the private advantage and benefit of the landowner in the district. The work that it is engaged in, the irrigation of lands in the district, is similar in kind to the work of municipal corporations when supplying their inhabitants with water, gas, or electric light. When acting in that capacity, it is the rule in California that they are liable for negligence of their agents and servants and it may be remarked that irrigation districts as well as municipal corporations can only act through their agents and servants. Chafor v. City of Long Beach, 174 Cal. 478, 163 Pac. 670, L. R. A. 1917E, 685, Ann. Cas. 1918D, 106; Kellar v. City of Los Angeles, 179 Cal. 605, 178 Pac. 505."

The parties seem to be in accord as to the principle of law that governs any possible theory of the case, but they are in disagreement as to the character of an irrigation district, and whether its functions be of a public or private character.

It is not disputed that the rule as to "public quasi corporations," such as townships, school districts, road districts, and the like, is that they are not liable for the negligence of their officers, unless such liability is created by statute. Dillon, Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.) § 1640; Abbott, Municipal Corporations, § 955.

It is understood, also, that a municipal corporation proper as a government agent in performing its public or political duties is subject to this same rule, but, in the performance of certain obligations and duties which are of a private, local, or proprietary character, the said rule of liability does not apply, but they are held to the same measure of responsibility as a private corporation. This is made clear by the Supreme Court in the Chafor and Keller Cases, supra. Another principle, also, which qualifies the rule as to public corporations discharging public functions, must be borne in mind to avoid confusion. This is stated in Perkins v. Blauth, 163 Cal. 782, 127 Pac. 50, as follows:

"Wherever the injury complained of is the taking or damaging of private property for public use without compensation then, under the guarantee of the federal Constitution against such invasion of the private rights of property, neither the state itself nor any of its agencies or mandatories may claim exemption from liability."

Manifestly, that principle can have no possible application to the case at bar, but it was of decisive moment in some of the cases cited herein.

[1] As to the character of irrigation districts as organized under our statute, it must be conceded that they are public corporations or public agencies, but not "municipal corporations," as that term is usually understood. In the illuminating discussion of the subject found in the pioneer case In re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 296, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106, they are treated as "public corporations for governmental purposes" and the act providing for their creation is declared to be for the benefit of the public, and the means by which such benefit is to be attained are held to be of a public character, and it was upon that ground and for that reason that the legislation was upheld. Therein it is said:

"Here are found the essential elements of a public corporation, none of which pertain to a private corporation. The property held by the corporation is in trust for the public, and subject to the control of the state. Its officers are public officers, chosen by the electors of the district, and invested with public duties. Its object is for the good of the public, and to promote the prosperity and welfare of the public. 'Where a corporation is composed exclusively of officers of the government, having no personal interest in it, or with its concerns, and only acting as organs of the state in effecting a great public improvement, it is a public corporation.' Angell and Ames on Corporations, § 32."

In Jenison v. Redfield, 149 Cal. 500, 87 Pac. 62, it is declared that such district when formed is a public corporation for the sole purpose of obtaining and distributing such water as may be necessary for the lands embraced in the district, "thus enabling each one to have for his land in the district, the benefit of a common system of irrigation, and bringing about the reclamation of the land of the district from aridity to a condition of suitability for cultivation." It was furthermore stated therein that such work under such system is for the public benefit and general welfare and that it might never be accomplished if left to individual enterprise; and that such legislation is sustained on the same ground as the levee and reclamation district legislation, that is, "that the land included within the limits of such a district requires, by reason of its situation and condition, the protection or reclamation thus made possible, and that it is for the public welfare that such protection or reclamation should be afforded such land." The court proceeds to point out that the district holds all the property acquired by it for one ultimate purpose, which is for the irrigation of the lands within the district, and that it cannot appropriate water to any other purpose.

In Lindsay-Strathmore I. Dist. v. Superior Court, 182 Cal. 315, 187 Pac. 1056, referring to these districts, the court said:

"They are public agencies of the same character as those particularly named [in subdivision 5, § 170, Code Civ. Proc.], and they are organized for the same general purposes to accomplish similar objects. There is no essential difference in these respects between an irrigation district and a reclamation district or a swamp land or drainage district. The latter are organized to reclaim land by draining off the surplus water. Irrigation districts are organized to reclaim land by supplying water thereto."

In Turlock Irrigation District v. White, 186 Cal. 183, 198 Pac. 1060, 17 A. L. R. 72, the court declares:

"The nature of an irrigation district has been a matter of judicial investigation and interpretation, and it has been held that such a corporation is not a 'municipal corporation,' but a 'public corporation for municipal purposes.' Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112."

And the court quotes with approval People v. Reclamation Dist. No. 551, 117 Cal. 114, 48 Pac. 1016, wherein it was said that these corporations are "state organizations for state purposes."

In Tormey et al. v. Anderson-Cottonwood Irr. Dist. (Cal. App.) 200 Pac. 814, the Supreme Court, in denying a hearing after the decision of this court, said: "The canal is constructed for public purposes and to serve the purpose of distribution of water to public use." The reference was to the canal which was used by the corporation defendant herein for the purpose of conveying the water for the irrigation of the lands within the district. The case was held to be one falling within the constitutional provision that "private property shall not be damaged for public use."

In fact, it has been consistently held by the Supreme Court from the beginning that these districts created under the elaborate scheme devised for their organization and operation by the Legislature are public agencies for the promotion of a public purpose. While the primary object is to secure the distribution of water for irrigation, and while the mere furnishing of water for irrigation might involve only the exercise of a proprietary function in the case of a municipal corporation, yet the situation and condition of the land in these districts are so peculiar and the public is so vitally interested in the project that the purpose is regarded, not only as for the advancement of the individual welfare, but for the promotion of the public interest. If appellant's contention be accepted as sound, it would follow that we have the anomalous situation of a public agency created for the mere purpose of exercising a private right or privilege. This view would necessitate the adoption of an entirely different theory from what has prevailed in this state for the justification of this legislation.

It would also destroy the foundation for the conclusion reached by the United States Supreme Court in the well-considered case of Fallbrook Irrigation District v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 112, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369, which decision has been approved and followed by the Supreme Court of this state. Therein the validity of the Wright Act (St. 1887, p. 29, as amended), was assailed upon various grounds, one of which is that it provided for the assessment of lands and the taking of property for a private purpose. Manifestly, this attack challenged the integrity of the whole scheme, and it received careful consideration at the hands of the court. In the opinion it is said:

"Coming to a review of these various objections, we think the first, that the water is not for a public use, is not well founded. * * * Is this assessment, for the nonpayment of which the land of the plaintiff was to be sold, levied for a public purpose? The question has, in substance, been answered in the affirmative by the people of California, and by the legislative and judicial branches of the state government."

The court then calls attention to section 1 of article 14 of our state Constitution, section 12 of said act, as amended in 1891 (St. 1891, p. 145), and the following decisions of the Supreme Court of this state: Turlock Irrigation District v. Williams, 76 Cal. 360, 18 Pac. 379; Central Irrigation Dist. v. De Lappe, 79 Cal. 35, 21 Pac. 825; In re Madera Irr. Dist., 92 Cal. 296, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106. After stating that the foregoing considerations are not necessarily binding upon the federal courts, the opinion proceeds:

"It is obvious, however, that what is a public use frequently and largely depends upon the facts and circumstances surrounding the particular subject-matter in regard to which the character of the use is questioned. To provide for the irrigation of lands in states where there is no color of necessity therefor within any fair meaning of the term, and simply for the purpose of gratifying the taste of the owner, or his desire to enter upon the cultivation of an entirely new kind of crop, not necessary for the purpose of rendering the ordinary cultivation of the land reasonably remunerative, might be regarded by courts as an improper exercise of legislative will, and the use might not be held to be public in any constitutional sense, no matter how many owners were interested in the scheme. On the other hand, in a state like California, which confessedly embraces millions of acres of arid lands, an act of the Legislature providing for their irrigation might well be regarded as an act devoting the water to a public use, and therefore as a valid exercise of the legislative power. * * * Viewing the subject for ourselves and in the light of these considerations, we have very little difficulty in coming to the same conclusion reached by the courts of California. The use must be regarded as a public use, or else it would seem to follow that no general scheme of irrigation can be formed or carried into effect. In general, the water to be used must be carried for some distance and over or through private property, which cannot be taken in invitum if the use to which it is to be put be not public, and, if there be no power to take property by condemnation, it may be impossible to acquire it at all. The use for which private property is to be taken must be a public one, whether the taking be by the exercise of the right of eminent domain or by that of taxation. Cole v. La Grange, 113 U. S. 1."

We reiterate that this legislation, involving, as it does, the levying of assessments and the forced sale of property for the payment thereof, the exercise of the right of eminent domain, the issuance of bonds, and the construction of valuable improvements, must fall to the ground if it has been conceived and enacted for the furtherance of a private purpose. But the fact is, and so recognized by the authorities, that what might be under some circumstances a mere private business is under the situation that characterizes these irrigation districts a matter of public concern. It may be added that, even in the case of municipal corporations under some circumstances, the furnishing of water may be regarded as a public or governmental function. Volume 3, § 1303, Dillon, Municipal Corporations.

It is manifest that to uphold the complaint herein as stating a cause of action against the corporation we must take the position that the district is concerned in its operations only with private matters. This follows for the reason that the complaint does not specify for what purpose the cement was to be used. If it could be legally devoted by the district to any public purpose, it would be necessary to negative that condition by alleging facts showing that the district was promoting a proprietary right in the use of the cement at the time of the accident.

There is no such allegation. Indeed, the complaint is so meager in that respect, the allegation being merely that the defendants left and permitted to remain upon the highway in said district "certain sacks of cement and material for construction work," that it may be doubted whether it sufficiently appears that the construction work was to be done in the district, or by defendants, or in pursuance of any purpose that the district might legally prosecute. At any rate, for the reason before declared, the complaint fails to state a cause of action against the district.

[2] We do not understand appellant to contend that the statute has imposed upon the district liability for private injuries resulting from the negligence of its officers or agents. It is true that the statute authorizes suits to be brought by and against them, but it does not purport to extend their liability beyond the general rule. The language authorizing the board of directors "to sue, appear and defend in all courts, actions, suits or proceedings" is to be understood as applying to such actions, etc., as a public corporation might be subject to in carrying out the purposes of the act. If the district, as a public corporation, was not liable for damages under such circumstances as appear in the complaint, the word "actions" is not to be construed as enlarging the liability of the district to include such a case. Markey v. Queen County, 154 N. Y. 675, 49 N. E. 71, 39 L. R. A. 46.

In this connection respondents call attention to the form of expression used by various authorities to denote the necessity for a positive enactment of the Legislature to impose this liability upon such public agencies. Without quotation, it is sufficient to cite them as follows: Kellar v. Los Angeles, supra; Abbott, Municipal Corporations, §§ 955 and 956; Barnett v. Contra Costa, 67 Cal. 77, 7 Pac. 177; Todd v. Kaw Valley Drainage District, 109 Kan. 754, 201 Pac. 1096; Board of Improvement v. Moreland, 94 Ark. 380, 127 S. W. 469, 21 Ann. Cas. 957; Chope v. Eureka, 78 Cal. 588, 21 Pac. 364, 4 L. R. A. 325, 12 Am. St. Rep. 113; Brunson v. Santa Monica, 27 Cal. App. 89, 148 Pac. 950.

[3] The pleading is also radically defective as to the trustees of the district. It appears that they did not personally leave the material thus exposed, and it is not claimed that they had knowledge of the condition, or that it was through their aid or encouragement that the said material was allowed to remain in its unguarded and unsafe situation.

Since it is alleged merely that they performed the negligent acts "by their agents and servants" they can be liable only by reason of the application of the doctrine of respondeat superior. But that principle does not apply to a case like this, where trustees or other public officers are sought to be bound by the negligence of subordinate officers or employees, unless there has been a failure to exercise care in the selection of such inferior officers. This necessary condition of liability does not appear at all in the complaint. Dobbins v. Arcadia, 44 Cal. App. 181, 186 Pac. 190.

In Baisley v. Henry (Cal. App.) 204 Pac. 399, it is said:

"As the agents of the city, defendants are not liable in an action of tort to plaintiff, a stranger, for the negligence of their coservant or agent. The rule is that an agent is not, in general, liable to third persons for the misfeasance or malfeasance of a subagent employed by him in the service of his principal, unless he is guilty of negligence in the appointment of such subagent, or improperly co-operates in the latter's acts or omissions. 2 C. J. 829."

It was therefore held that, since it was sought to charge the officers of the city for the negligence of their employees, the complaint failed to state a cause of action, because there was no allegation of negligence in the selection of such employees.

We may summarize our conclusions as follows: (1) Whatever may be the recognized rule in other jurisdictions under similar legislation, an irrigation district organized under the Wright Act or California Irrigation District Act must be deemed a public agency created for a public purpose. (2) Such agency is not subject to an action for damages resulting from the negligence of its officers or agents, in the absence of a statute expressly imposing such liability. (3) That no such liability is expressly imposed in or by the law providing for the organization and government of such districts or by any other statute of this state. (4) That no cause of action is stated against the individual respondents, for the reason that they did not participate in nor encourage the act of negligence that resulted in the injury, nor have any knowledge of it, and because it appears that whatever negligence existed was the result of the acts of subagents or employees of the district, without any negligence on the part of the trustees in the selection of such subagents or employees.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

60 Cal. App. 339

WILD GOOSE COUNTRY CLUB v. BUTTE COUNTY. (Civ. 2556.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 30, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 29, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 26, 1923.)

1. Taxation ⊂=348—Every use to which adapted considered in arriving at value of land.

In arriving at the value of land for purpose of taxation, it was proper to take into consideration every use to which it was naturally adapted, and which would enhance its value in the estimation of persons generally purchasing in the open market.

2. Taxation ⊂=485(1)—Burden upon taxpayers to show assessment unfair or fraudulent.

On hearing before board of equalization, an assessment of land for purpose of taxation is presumed to be fair, and the burden of proof rests on taxpayers asserting unfairness and fraud, and in the absence of evidence tending to show the value of taxpayer's land, or of other lands in the county, the premises are wanting from which a conclusion may be drawn by the board that any inequality of assessments exists.

3. Taxation ⊂=485(3)—Proof of assessment at higher value does not justify inference of inequality.

Proof that one taxpayer's land was assessed at a higher value than those of his neighbors does not justify the inference that there is any inequality in the assessments, in the absence of proof of the relative market values of the lands compared.

4. Taxation ⊂=543(7)—Evidence held to support finding lands not assessed for more than cash value.

In an action to recover moneys paid under protest as taxes, evidence held to support finding that plaintiff's lands were not assessed for more than their cash value.

5. Taxation ⊂=543(7)—Not presumed that board of equalization had personal knowledge of value of lands.

In an action to recover moneys paid under protest as taxes, it cannot be presumed, in the absence of proof, that members of the board of equalization had personal knowledge of the value of plaintiff's lands or of the surrounding lands at the time plaintiff presented its case before the board.

6. Taxation ⊂=537—Failure to raise assessment of surrounding lands held not fraudulent, entitling recovery of tax paid.

Failure of board of equalization to raise assessment of surrounding lands for purposes of taxation, as it did plaintiff's lands, held not to constitute fraud entitling plaintiff to recover taxes paid under protest, in view of fact that time was too short to permit the raising of such assessments.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; J. F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by the Wild Goose Country Club against the County of Butte. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Lester J. Hinsdale, Butler & Van Dyke, Downey & Downey, and Jos. L. Knowles, all of Sacramento, for appellant.

J. R. Robinson, Dist. Atty., of Chico, and George E. Gardner, Deputy Dist. Atty., of Oroville, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover moneys paid under protest as taxes for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1919, on the alleged ground that the assessment of its property was fraudulently excessive. The defendant was given judgment upholding the assessment, and plaintiff appeals therefrom.

There was a general increase by the county assessor in the assessment of lands in Butte county in 1919. In that year, for the first time, the market value of lands for hunting purposes was taken into consideration in making assessments. The evidence covers a period of four years, during which the lands of plaintiff and those of an adjoining gun club were assessed at the following sums per acre: 1917 and 1918, $5; 1919 and 1920, $50. The assessments of other adjoining lands in 1917 and 1918 were from $4 to $6; in 1919, from $10 to $15; and in 1920, from $25 to $40.

July 5, 1919, the plaintiff filed its petition with the board of supervisors, sitting as a board of equalization, praying that the assessment of its lands be reduced to $10 an acre, on the grounds that $10 an acre was the full cash value thereof, and that other lands in the county of the same quality and similarly situated were assessed at $10 an acre, particularly three adjoining tracts. On the 29th of July, representatives of the plaintiff appeared before the board of equalization in support of the petition. No witnesses were sworn, but the attorney for plaintiff made a statement of the grievances complained of, pointed out the assessment of adjoining holdings, and stated that such lands "were much the same as a large portion" of plaintiff's land. For the purposes of this opinion, no significance will be given to the fact that the representatives of plaintiff were not sworn.

[1] Plaintiff's contention before the board and at the trial in the superior court was that its lands should have been classed as grazing land in making the assessment, without consideration of their market value as a hunting preserve. In arriving at the value of the land it was proper to take into consideration every use to which it was naturally adapted and which would enhance its value in the estimation of persons generally, purchasing in the open market. The question is, not what its value is for a particular purpose, but its value in view of all the purposes to which it is naturally adapted. Sacramento, etc., R. R. Co. v. Heilbron, 156 Cal. 408, 104 Pac. 979; Yolo Water & Power Co. v. Hudson, 182 Cal. 48, 186 Pac. 772.

[2, 3] The evidence shows without conflict, and the court found, that at the hearing before the board of equalization no evidence was presented or offered bearing upon the value of the plaintiff's lands or the value of any property in Butte county or tending to show that any property in the county was assessed at other than the full cash value thereof or that there was "any inequality of assessments between the said property owned by plaintiff and any other property in Butte county, or that the said assessment so placed upon plaintiff's property * * * was excessive, unequal or tended to discriminate against plaintiff or cause plaintiff to bear an excessive or unequal burden of taxation," or "tending to prove or establish any fraud, mistake, arbitrary, willful or capricious action on the part of said assessor." In appellant's closing brief it is said:

"It may be conceded under the authorities that the county board of equalization is a quasi judicial tribunal, and that its decisions may be attacked only upon the ground of fraud or what is termed 'something equivalent to fraud.'"

In Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 121 Pac. 384, 9 A. L. R. 1277, it was held that, after the board of equalization has upheld an assessment in a case such as this, any fraud on the part of the assessor becomes immaterial, and that the determination of the board "cannot be avoided, unless the board has proceeded 'arbitrarily and in willful disregard of the law intended for their guidance and control, with the evident purpose of imposing unequal burdens upon certain of the taxpayers,' * * * or unless there be something equivalent to fraud in the action of the board." The assessment is presumed to be fair, and the burden of proof rested upon petitioner in the proceeding before the board. Sunday Lake Iron Co. v. Township of Wakefield, 247 U. S. 350, 38 Sup. Ct. 495, 62 L. Ed. 1154. In the absence of evidence tending to show the value of plaintiff's lands, or of other lands in the county, the premises were wanting from which a conclusion could be drawn by the board that inequality of assessments existed.

Appellant relies on the case of Birch v. County of Orange, 186 Cal. 736, 200 Pac. 647. In that case the plaintiffs appealed from a judgment of nonsuit. The facts proven on the trial therein had been proven at the hearing before the board of equalization. In reversing the judgment the court said:

"The evidence of plaintiff presented on the hearing before the board of equalization, and on the trial, discloses that this tract is surrounded by other oil lands almost identical in character, development, production, and value, compared acre for acre of proved and producing oil lands alone, which, under the same assessment, were valued at a rate from 10 to 15 times less than was placed on plaintiffs' lands."

In Southern Pacific Land Co. v. San Diego Co., 183 Cal. 543, 546, 191 Pac. 931, 933, in holding that the trial court erred in sustaining a general demurrer to the complaint, the court said:

"The complaint substantially charges that the property of plaintiff was assessed at nearly twice its real value, while the other property in the county was assessed, in pursuance of a 'systematic, willful, and intentional' scheme to so do, at not to exceed 25 per cent. of its real value, and that all this was shown to the board of equalization by evidence without substantial contradiction or conflict, * * * and that the board, 'with full knowledge of these facts and 'without regard to said facts and in disregard of the evidence,' arbitrarily denied plaintiff's application for relief. * * * An entirely different situation would be presented here if the complaint did not show that the board had denied plaintiff's application with full knowledge of all the facts alleged."

Proof that one taxpayer's lands are assessed at a higher value than those of his neighbors does not justify the inference that there is any inequality in the assessments, in the absence of proof of the relative market values of the lands compared. The complaint alleges and the evidence shows that lands generally in Butte county are assessed at sixty per cent. of their market values. If it be assumed that the board had knowledge of such practice, then the question before the board for their determination was twofold: (1) What was the value of plaintiff's lands; and (2) Were they assessed for more than 60 per cent of such value? Under the authorities cited, the determination of that question by the board is conclusive, in view of the facts disclosed by the evidence.

[4-6] The evidence supports the finding that plaintiff's lands were not assessed for more than their cash value. Plaintiff purchased the lands in 1914 at $35 an acre. Defendant's witnesses at the trial placed their value at from $75 to $125 an acre on March 1, 1919. Some of these witnesses placed a valuation of $65 an acre on lands adjoining those of the two gun clubs. One of the supervisors testified that the assessments of such adjoining lands were not before the board for adjustment in 1919; that the board's attention was first called to the alleged inequality in assessment July 29, 1919, when plaintiff appeared, asking that its assessment be reduced; that it was then too late to cite the owners of such surrounding lands to show cause why their assessments should not be increased, because the law required five days' notice and the board of equalization was required to complete its work by the 4th of August, but that in the following year they were so cited and their assessments were raised as set out in the first part of this opinion. It cannot be presumed, in the absence of proof, that the members of the board had personal knowledge of the value of plaintiff's lands or of the surrounding lands at the time plaintiff presented its case before the board. If the inequality complained of be conceded, and even if it be assumed, contrary to the fact, that the plaintiff offered to prove such inequality before the board, there is high authority to sustain the conclusion that the failure of the board to raise the assessment on surrounding lands in 1919, under the circumstances stated, did not constitute fraud or "something equivalent to fraud." In Sunday Lake Iron Co. v. Township of Wakefield, supra, it appeared that the state board of tax assessors had raised the assessment of plaintiff's property from $65,000 to $1,071,000, the alleged full value thereof, whereas other lands throughout the county were generally assessed at not exceeding one-third of their value. The court said:

"Because of alleged lack of time and inadequate information, it [the board] declined to order a new and general survey of values or generally to increase other assessments, notwithstanding plaintiff in error represented and offered to present evidence showing that they amounted to no more than one-third of the true market values. * * * The record discloses facts which render it more than probable that plaintiff in error's mines were assessed for the year 1911 (but not before or afterwards) relatively higher than other lands within the county, although the statute enjoins the same rule for all. But we are unable to conclude that the evidence suffices clearly to establish that the state board entertained or is chargeable with any purpose or design to discriminate. Its action is not incompatible with an honest effort in new and difficult circumstances to adopt valuations not relatively unjust or unequal. When plaintiff in error first challenged the values placed upon the property of others no adequate time remained for detailed consideration, nor was there sufficient evidence before the board to justify immediate and general revaluations. The very next year a diligent and, so far as appears, successful effort was made to rectify any inequality."

Under the foregoing facts, as found by the court, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover any part of the taxes paid. The other alleged errors have no bearing upon such findings, and a discussion thereof would serve no useful purpose, since the facts found upon uncontradicted evidence preclude a recovery.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: HART, J.; BURNETT, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

FINCH, P. J. In its petition for rehearing appellant complains that the opinion filed does not accurately state its contention and that "plaintiff never did advance, and does not now advance, the contention" that "its lands should have been classed as grazing lands in making the assessment, without consideration of their market value as a hunting preserve." In its petition to the board of equalization appellant alleged "that the only value agriculturally said land has is for grazing," and made no reference to any other value. Mr. Adams, the secretary and treasurer of the appellant, who verified the petition and personally appeared before the board, testified at the trial that the application before the board was based on the assumption that the land should have been classed as grazing land. Mr. Hinsdale, who was a director of the club and appeared before the board as attorney for petitioner, testified at the trial:

"I made the point there that I doubted very much that the mere fact that a man might satisfy a whim or follow a hobby would establish a value on his land, citing an instance of a man who might enjoy wild life and might pay any price or refuse any price to build a home or watch birds flying around."

Mr. Moore, a member of the club, testified that the market value of plaintiff's land was about $15 an acre, and stated that he based his answer on the revenue which the land would produce for grazing purposes. In its opening brief appellant made the contention that the land "is practically worthless for anything except pasture land" and said:

"In reality the tax which was levied was not a direct tax at all, but an excise tax or license on the privilege of hunting. * * * It would be as reasonable to say that a strip of water on the bay of San Francisco, where there may be fish, would have a market value as land, as to say that worthless land has a value of $50 an acre because ducks are abundant on it."

In view of all the foregoing, counsel's assertion that plaintiff never did make the contention attributed to it is a matter of surprise. Appellant's position here would have been stronger if it had directed its efforts before the board of equalization to a comparison of the market value of its lands with the market values of adjoining lands, rather than to a comparison based on grazing and agricultural qualities.

The question to be determined is whether the decision of the board of equalization was based on fraud or the equivalent of fraud. The conduct of the board must be determined from the evidence produced before it. The hearing was informal, and the evidence was not reduced to writing. Mr. Adams testified at the trial that the assessor's plat book of 1919 was produced before the board; that Mr. Hinsdale pointed out the "$10 assessments around these $50 assessments," stated that plaintiff's and the surrounding lands were of like character, and that they were of like value. Mr. Hinsdale testified that he appeared before the board and—

"made a statement of our grievances, referred to the plat, and * * * pointed out the adjoining holdings and how they were assessed, and called attention to the fact that the adjoining lands were much the same as a large portion of ours, except they were higher. We were the lowest point, and the lands east and north were higher lands, and used, most of them, for the same purpose—pasture and hunting—and that the only line between them was the wire fence * * * and explained that I thought an assessment of $50 on our lands and $10 on the adjoining, a raise of $5 to $50 on ours and to $10 on theirs was unfair, and not according to the provision of the Constitution. * * * Mr. Porter and Mr. Whipple * * * and Mr. Evans and I think one other gentleman asked me various questions, and I was on my feet for * * * maybe half an hour answering their questions about the character of the land, and about its value for duck hunting, and what memberships were worth, and various questions. * * * Mr. Evans asked me if I thought it was not fair that this club should not help to pay with the taxes of the men who ate the ducks. Mr. Porter asked if we didn't have all the ducks over there, and volunteered that when the shots were fired that the ducks went into his ground. * * * The only evidence that was produced was the evidence that I produced, except two or three questions that Mr. Adams answered at my request."

On cross-examination the witness testified:

"Q. Didn't you say * * * that the selling value of the land was not material, because you didn't want to sell it? A. I may have said it so far as I was personally concerned. I couldn't speak for all the club."

Mr. Porter, a member of the board of equalization, testified:

"No one was sworn and gave evidence. * * * Mr. Hinsdale was the principal spokesman, and his was a mere matter of argument as an attorney. We asked him what he considered the value of the land per acre. The answer he made was there was no price upon the land, as they did not wish to sell it. * * * In 1919 a great portion of Butte lands were doubled in assessment, and some of them trebled. * * * The board of supervisors never had looked at what this property (adjoining lands) was assessed at. When the Wild Goose Country Club people came before the board and entered the complaint, it was getting late in the month. The assessor had asked the state board of equalization for an extension of time. They gave him an extension of time, if I remember, to the 19th of July; also that the board of supervisors must finish their work the 4th of August. The Wild Goose, the Country Club, came before the board * * * on the 29th. * * * In order to cite those people to appear, * * * the board of supervisors had to give them a special notice describing their land and five days' notice, and we had to finish our work in five days. * * * It was absolutely impossible in 1919 to cite those people to appear before the board and show why their assessment should not be raised."

The evidence sustains the finding that all the property in the county, including that of plaintiff, was fairly assessed, except these adjoining lands. When the low assessments of adjoining lands were called to the attention of the board, it was too late to raise the assessment on such lands for that year. The members of the board had a choice of three courses: (1) To reduce plaintiff's assessment to that of the adjoining lands, thus relieving plaintiff of a large part of its just share of taxes, at the expense of all other taxpayers whose lands were assessed at the same relative value as plaintiff's. (2) To make a horizontal reduction in the assessment of all property except that which was undervalued. (3) To let the assessment stand, as they did, and correct the inequality the following year. The burden of proof was on the plaintiff to show fraud or its equivalent, and it cannot be said, under the evidence, that the action of the board, in adopting the third rather than either of the other courses open to it, constituted fraud or the equivalent of fraud.

Appellant attempts to distinguish between this case and that of Sunday Lake Iron Co. v. Township of Wakefield, cited in the opinion filed. Each case involved the question of fraud or its equivalent on the part of a board of equalization, and, however much the cases may differ in other respects, the attempt to distinguish between them on the question under consideration is not convincing. Neither is there any conflict between the opinion herein and that in the case of Birch v. County of Orange, 186 Cal. 736, 200 Pac. 647. The facts proved before the board of equalization in this case are so meager as compared with those shown in the Birch Case, as pointed out in the opinion, that there is little in common between the two cases. There is no doubt as to the correctness of appellant's contention that lands "of the same quality and similarly situated" should be assessed at the same value. The quality and situation of the property, however, must be understood to include all the elements which combine to establish its market value. Plaintiff's lands are not of the same quality as the surrounding lands. One of plaintiff's witnesses testified that more than half of its lands are covered with water during the whole year and that three-fourths thereof are covered for three-fourths of the year, while the evidence shows that the surrounding lands are higher than those of plaintiff. One of defendant's witnesses testified that the hunting on plaintiff's land is "many times better" than on the adjoining lands.

Appellant contends "that a radically different method was used in valuing appellant's property, than in the assessment of adjoining lands, in that value for hunting purposes was considered as a factor only in the assessment of appellant's and another gun club's lands. Values of from $25 to $40 an acre were placed on the adjoining lands in 1920 as grazing and farming lands. Their values for hunting purposes were not considered. It is a fair inference from the evidence that such lands were more valuable for farming and grazing than as hunting grounds, and, being assessed according to their most valuable use, it is immaterial that a less valuable use was not considered. The low assessment of these lands in 1919 was not due to any failure to consider their values for hunting purposes, but failure to give proper consideration to their higher values as farming and grazing lands.

Plaintiff alleged that all the lands in Butte county, with the exeception of its own and those of another gun club, were assessed at 60 per cent. of their cash values and that plaintiff's land was assessed at five times its cash value. There was ample evidence to show that all lands in the county, including plaintiff's, were assessed at 60 per cent. of their cash values, excepting certain adjoining or neighboring lands which were undervalued. Plaintiff then must recover, if at all, not on the express allegations of its complaint that its lands were assessed for more than their value, nor upon the theory that its lands were assessed relatively higher than other lands generally, but on the proof that certain other lands were assessed at less than 60 per cent. of their cash value. In other words, plaintiff's cause of complaint, as disclosed by the evidence, is not that its own lands are assessed too high, but that certain other lands are assessed too low. Plaintiff has no greater cause of complaint on account of these low assessments than has every other taxpayer in the county whose lands were fairly assessed. The law certainly does not contemplate that a taxpayer, whose lands are assessed at the same relative value as other lands generally in the county, is entitled to have his assessment reduced to the level of a comparatively small number of parcels which are assessed at a low figure. If such were the law, but few assessments could be upheld, because absolute equality in the assessment of thousands of parcels of land is impossible of accomplishment. "Unless it is shown that the undervaluation was intentional and systematic, unequal assessment will not be held to violate the equality clause." Southern Railway Co. v. Watts, 43 Sup. Ct. 195, 67 L. Ed. ——.

Plaintiff sought to recover the difference between the sum it actually paid as taxes and the amount it would have been required to pay under a relatively uniform assessment. It will be interesting to ascertain what that difference actually is as shown by the evidence. The total assessment of all property in Butte county for the year 1919 was something over $42,500,000. The evidence shows that the lands claimed to have been undervalued in 1919 were raised to a fair valuation in 1920, the aggregate increase being between $75,000 and $100,000. If it be assumed that such lands were of the same valve in 1919 as in 1920, then in the former year they were undervalued to the extent of not more than $100,000. If these lands had been fairly valued, the total assessment of the county for the year 1919 would have been $42,600,000. Plaintiff alleges that the tax rate was $2.55. The problem, then, is to determine what rate of taxation would have been required on a valuation of $42,600,000 to raise the same amount as was produced on an assessment of $42,500,000 at the rate of $2.55. A simple calculation shows that it would have required a rate of $2.544, and, since plaintiff's total assessment was $87,485, its taxes would have been reduced to the extent of $5.25.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

---

(60 Cal. App. 350)

GUNTHER et al. v. McCORMICK et al.
(Civ. 4251.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 30, 1922.)

1. Mechanics' liens ⟹132(11)—Separate contracts not tacked together to enlarge time for filing.

Where work for which lien was claimed was performed under three separate contracts, two of which were fully performed four months prior to the filing of notice for lien, and the last work on one of them was performed within about 30 days of the time of filing, the orders cannot be tacked together so as to enlarge the time of filing.

2. Appeal and error ⟹1008(1)—Finding as to good faith in performance of contract under which lien claimed not disturbed on appeal.

In action to foreclose a mechanic's lien, finding of court that plaintiff was in good faith in performing contract under which lien was claimed would not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Payment ⟹68—Burden on payer to show to which account payment was to apply.

Where work was performed under three separate contracts, and on a named date $10 was paid by defendant, the burden was on him to show on which contract the payment was to be applied.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by J. F. Gunther and another against Lillie H. McCormick and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant named appeals. Judgment modified, and as so modified affirmed.

Guy V. Shoup and A. A. Jones, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

T. John Butler, of San Francisco, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action to foreclose a mechanic's lien. Judgment was awarded them in the trial court, and the owner of the real estate has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

In the fall of 1919 Ella W. Goodrich leased from E. O. McCormick and Lillie H. McCormick, his wife, the house and lot known as 2015 Broadway in San Francisco. The lease was to continue 21 months from the 1st day of December, 1919. As an accommodation to the lessee, the lessors allowed her to enter about the middle of November, and shortly after she entered she commenced making repairs and placing orders therefor. The first order was written down by the plaintiffs on their letter head, and is as follows:

"Nov. 21st, 1919.

"Mrs. Goodrich, 2015 Broadway:

"Front attic, paint 3 coats and closet, on west; middle, same as front; east bedroom, wood 1 coat; west bedroom, wood 1 coat, bath 2 coats; south bedroom, paper walls, paint wood, bath 2 coats; small hall, 1 coat; conservatory, 3 coats, conservatory floor 2 coats; basement and kitchen and pantry, 3 coats of paint, 1 coat enamel. $290.00."

A week or ten days after the plaintiffs had commenced the above-mentioned work, the lessee requested the plaintiffs to do some other work. This second order is most concisely stated by quoting the testimony of Mr. Porter:

"I have notes of the things I done there. We undertook that under a contract of $290, and then they wanted the cement steps and the walls cleaned in there, and that is a very hard thing to estimate, and so I told her I would do that under time and materials, that means that the material that I used amounted to $28, that was not included in the $290. Papering two rooms, $37.75. Painting linen closet, hall closet, basement floor, $21. Painting back stairs, tinting halls and varnishing wood, $31. Painting butler's pantry, floor and shelves, $18.75. Painting floors in basement, hall toilet, and two bedrooms and kitchen, $63.50. Kitchen counters, and sideboard, $20, tables and chairs, $17.50. Kitchen drawers, $5.50. Painting outside of conservatory, $40. Steps and sides of the wall, $65. Touching up in the living rooms, hall, and parlor, $24.75; painting in the basement room, $7. Painting in the wardrobe, $4.50."

Prior to January 29, 1920, the lessee placed a third order which was for repairs on the roof. Mr. Porter did not give the date the order was received, but he testified that the lessee telephoned for him; that he called and that she indicated the work she wanted done. She asked him to do the work, and he told her he would on condition that she would give him a check as soon as he got it done. She gave him a check, which was returned marked "No funds." That check was for $59 and some cents. No work was done in February, none was done in March, and on April 20th Mr. Porter testified that he sent a workman to the house who went there and gave the conservatory floor the second coat of paint. Turning back to order No. 1, it will be noted that the service rendered on April 20, 1920, was included in the first order.

[1] A notice of lien was filed May 24, 1920. By comparison of dates it will be observed that order No. 2 and order No. 3 had been fully done and performed nearly 4 months prior to the filing of the notice of lien. Such being the case, neither of those orders should have been included in the judgment against the appellant. In the case of Fly v. Cline, 193 Pac. 615, 621, Presiding Justice Finlayson, writing the opinion for the District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, says:

"Where labor or materials are furnished under separate building contracts, even though such contracts are between the same persons and relate to the same building or employment, the contracts cannot be tacked together so as to enlarge the time for filing a lien for what was done or furnished under either. The claim of lien must be filed for what was done or furnished under each contract, within the statutory period after its completion."

See, also, 27 Cyc. 144; 2 Jones on Liens (3d Ed.) § 1431; Berkshire v. Hall (Mo. App.) 202 S. W. 414, 416.

[2] The appellant contends most earnestly that the act of the plaintiffs in returning to the property on the 20th day of April, 1920, for the purpose of applying the second coat to the floor in the conservatory, was not done in good faith, but that it was an attempt to extend the plaintiff's time to file a lien. Such matters were for the consideration of the trial court when that court was attempting to determine when order No. 1 was completed. It has made a finding that it was completed on the 20th day of April, 1920. Under the facts before us this court may not disturb that finding.

[3] On April 22d the lessee paid the plaintiffs $10 on account. There is nothing in the record to the effect that the payment was paid on, and was to be applied to, either order No. 1, order No. 2, or order No. 3, or all together. The burden of making that showing rested on the respondents.

In making up the amount of its judgment as against the appellant, the trial court added together orders Nos. 1, 2 and 3, and also $2.40, the cost of verifying and recording the notice of lien, and then deducted the payment of $10 and certain charges the plaintiff had made for painting some pieces of furniture. It thus arrived at the amount of $711.60; whereas, the trial court should have ignored orders 2 and 3, and it should have deducted the payment of $10 from $290, the amount of order No. 1, and then it should have added the recording charge, $2.40, making $282.40.

The judgment is modified by inserting $282.40 in the place and stead of $711.60 in each place where those figures occur in the judgment, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 383

HERSOM v. HERSOM. (Civ. 3855.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 5, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 1, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⊜1033(7)—When failure to find on question of fraud not reversible error.

A failure by the trial court to make a finding as to the question of fraud tendered by appellant's answer is not reversible error, where from a consideration of appellant's brief the appellate court finds the evidence was utterly insufficient to support a finding in his favor.

2. Trial ⊜395(2)—Trial court's finding held not indefinite or uncertain.

A trial court in a divorce action made a finding, reading: "There is some community property interest belonging to the parties herein, but that said interest consists only of an equity which is a right to redeem certain property which once belonged to the parties, but which property has been foreclosed upon by an assignee of the mortgages." Held, though the finding, standing alone, is indefinite and uncertain, it is sufficient, where it is made intelligible and sufficiently exact by a reference to portions of the pleadings; the description of the property in the answer being a part of the finding of the court, and the right referred to being the right to redeem within the time fixed by law from the decree of foreclosure mentioned in the pleadings.

3. Divorce ⊜179—Objection to hearing had in chambers waived on appeal if not made to trial judge.

The purpose of an appeal from a trial court being to review some action of the court, the contention that the action of the trial judge in a divorce action in conducting a hearing in his chamber was error is not tenable, where appellant made no objection to the holding of the session in chambers, but participated therein, thus failing to give the trial court an opportunity to pass upon the question urged on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Milton Hersom against Carrie Hersom. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Judgment affirmed.

C. L. Kilgore, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Harry K. Smith, of Los Angeles (Rollin L. McNitt, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

WORKS, J. This is an action for divorce. The appeal is taken by defendant from an interlocutory decree rendered in favor of plaintiff, and the only points made by appellant relate to the disposition of certain alleged community property of the parties. In addition to various denials contained in her answer, appellant averred affirmatively that respondent and his mother had fraudulently deprived appellant of her interest in the alleged community property. It was averred that the fraud was consummated by respondent's mother purchasing certain mortgages which were outstanding against the property, respondent then fraudulently refraining from making certain payments falling due on the obligations, and thus enabling his mother to foreclose the mortgages for the benefit, as it was alleged, of herself and him.

[1] Appellant contends for a reversal of the judgment on the ground that the trial court failed to find on the issue of fraud tendered by the answer. Passing by other arguments which respondent opposes to this contention, it is enough to say that the evidence on the question of fraud, reproduced in full in appellant's brief, was utterly insufficient to support a finding in her favor. The finding, therefore, must have been adverse to her, if one had been made. Under such circumstances a failure to find is not reversible error. Cross v. Thiele (Cal. App.) 197 Pac. 974.

[2] The point is made that the findings and judgment are so indefinite and uncertain "that it is impossible to determine what community property existed or what rights appellant had therein." The complaint alleges that "the community property which the parties one time owned has been foreclosed upon and taken away from them by law," but no attempt is made in the pleading to describe the property. The answer specifically admits the truth of the allegation that the community property had been "taken away" by foreclosure, and follows the admission with the allegations of fraud to which we have referred. Moreover, the answer supplies the omission made in the complaint, for in the former pleading a description of the property is set forth. The description follows the admission as to the foreclosure and the allegations of fraud, and the described property is referred to as the "said property above mentioned." The finding of the trial court which gives rise to the indefiniteness and uncertainty inveighed against by appellant is that—"There is some community property interest belonging to the parties herein, but that said interest consists only of an equity which is a right to redeem certain property which once belonged to the parties, but which property has been foreclosed upon by an assignee of the mortgages."

This finding, standing alone, is indefinite and uncertain, there is no doubt; but it is made intelligible and sufficiently exact by a reference to the above-mentioned portions of the pleadings. Who can doubt, after perusing the allegations of the parties, that in legal effect the description of property in the answer is part of the finding of the court? Who can doubt that the right referred to in the finding was the right to redeem within the time fixed by law from the decree of foreclosure mentioned in the pleadings? The point is not well taken.

[3] After the cause had been submitted for decision the trial court set aside the submission for the purpose of receiving further evidence, and a hearing was had by the judge in chambers. Counsel for both sides were present on the occasion. Appellant contends that the action of the trial judge in conducting a hearing in his chambers was error. Respondent meets this contention by various arguments, but a consideration of one only of them will dispose of the question. Appellant made no objection to the holding of the session in chambers, thus failing to give the trial court an opportunity to pass upon the question she now urges on appeal.

"The purpose of an appeal from a trial court is to review some action of the court, and, as there was no action in this instance, no order which involved the question now sought to be presented, there is nothing to review." People v. Taminago, 35 Cal. App. 238, 169 Pac. 696; People v. Walton (Cal. App.) 199 Pac. 824.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: FINLAYSON, P. J.; CRAIG, J.

---

(60 Cal. App. 289)

VALENTINI v. GOBBI. (Civ. 4374.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 28, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 25, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 26, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸1001(1) — Appellate court has no power to disturb jury's verdict, except in absence of supporting testimony.

An appellate court has no power to disturb the determination of the jury, except where there is no testimony supporting it.

2. Tender ⟸12(2), 14(1), 18—Tender before suit must be sufficient, unconditional, and be deposited as required by statute.

Where it does not appear that any tender made by defendant had been deposited in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 1030, or Civ. Code. § 1500, or that the tender was sufficient or unconditional, it was not good.

3. New trial ⟸143(5)—Jurors' affidavit regarding manner of arriving at verdict offered in support of new trial because of excessive verdict properly rejected.

Affidavits of jurors, showing how they arrived at a general verdict, offered in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground of an excessive award, under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, held properly rejected, since, if defendant desired the jury to specify each item of the claim allowed or rejected, he should, under section 624, have adopted a practice to that end.

4. Evidence ⟸591—Plaintiff, calling defendant to testify, not bound by defendant's testimony.

Plaintiff, calling the defendant to testify as witness, is not bound by defendant's testimony so given, nor estopped from claiming under other evidence produced regarding the same matter.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Cherubino Valentini against Leander Gobbi. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Weldon & Wessels, of Ukiah, for appellant.

Hale McCowen, Jr., of Ukiah, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to obtain a judgment in the sum of $3,000 as for moneys had and received. The jury returned a general verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $1,056. The defendant made a motion for a new trial; his motion was denied, and the defendant has appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

[1] Prior to the year 1918 the plaintiff obtained from the defendant a lease on certain farming lands. That lease expired by virtue of its own terms. The plaintiff continued on the premises, holding over from year to year under the lease. This was the plaintiff's status on April 15, 1918, when a meeting was held in the office of his attorney. At that meeting there were present besides the attorney, Mr. Iversen, the plaintiff and the defendant. On the conversations held by those three persons at that time the case largely turned. The plaintiff and Mr. Iversen were both called to the stand as witnesses. Mr. Iversen testified that the plaintiff had come to him for advice, and that thereupon Mr. Iversen sent for Mr. Gobbi, and, pursuant to such request, Mr. Gobbi called. He also testified that the two principals engaged in many disputes on several different subjects. Defendant stated that it was getting late in the season; that the ground was becoming dry, and that it was urgently necessary that the lands occupied by the plaintiff should be plowed at once. It was his claim that many teams should be put on, and that the work should be done in one day. On the other hand, the plaintiff contended that he had ample time to do his work. The witness then continued:

"I was acting in the nature of mediator and tried to get them together. I saw that they could not get together and I made the propositions that Gobbi pay Valentini for the work and cancel the lease. Gobbi refused to do it. He said he was afraid of cold weather at the time this settlement was going on. He said he was afraid there will be a frost, and if he had to pay for his work, and there comes a frost and kills the grapes, he will lose it all. I then made the proposition myself to Mr. Gobbi that Gobbi should oversee the ranch, and we could divide the proceeds according to the original terms of the lease, and pay Mr. Gobbi for his work. Mr. Gobbi said it was absolutely agreeable to him, and that he would do that."

The plaintiff, while on the stand as a witness, testified to the same effect. The defendant, being called to the stand as a witness, denied that the conversation was as delineated by Mr. Iversen or by the plaintiff, and, continuing, he stated that on the day before April 14th the plaintiff had stated that he would no longer go forward with the terms of the lease, and that he was through with it. These two conflicting theories were addressed to the jury, and it rested with that body to determine which theory had been sustained by a preponderance of the testimony. Notwithstanding that the writer of this opinion might be inclined to accept the theory testified to by Mr. Gobbi, an appellate court must always bear in mind that conflicts in the evidence are for the determination of the jury or the trial court sitting without a jury, and that an appellate court has no power to disturb the determination of the jury, except where there is no testimony in the record supporting the verdict.

After the conversation had in Mr. Iversen's office the plaintiff left Ukiah to enlist in the army. Mr. Gobbi proceeded to farm the land covered by the lease, produced a crop, sold it for $5,933.28, and at the time of the trial testified fully as to the amount of his receipts and the amount of his expenditures.

[2] In his brief the appellant claims that the amounts allowed in the account for services rendered by him in managing the property and for expenses incurred by him were too small. We cannot pass on any of these matters, as the record is insufficient. The complaint was a common count for money had and received in the sum of $3,000. The jury was not asked to bring in any special verdicts, but it was allowed to bring in a verdict general in form, "We, the jury, find for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,056." This court cannot tell by the record whether the jury in making up its verdict allowed the defendant a dollar a day or $250 per month. There was evidence both ways. This court cannot tell whether the jury allowed the defendant all of the expenditures which he claimed he had made, or, if it disallowed some of the items, which ones were disallowed. In this same connection the appellant contends that the item referred to by the witnesses as a lot of "sour wine" was not an issue. The complaint, as we noted above, does not show on its face whether it was or was not. The evidence shows that the plaintiff's claim in this behalf amounted to $268.26; the appellant claims to have tendered in writing $335.95 in payment of that item, and that the defendant, therefore, should not have been taxed with costs. The answer of the appellant contained no allegations of a tender, and the record does not show that the appellant did, after making the tender, do anything in the nature of making a deposit for the purpose of keeping his tender good. Code Civ. Proc. § 1030; Civ. Code, § 1500. Moreover, the record shows that when the tender was made the plaintiff refused to accept it, unless he was paid also for his share of the crop of 1918. As the appellant was at all times disputing the right of the plaintiff to share in the proceeds of the crop of 1918, it is patent that his tender was in effect a conditional tender; that is, that it should be accepted as payment in full of accounts. If it be viewed in that light, then it is equally clear, considering it in connection with the verdict, that the amount of the tender was too small.

[3] The defendant in his notice of intention to move for a new trial alleged, among other things, that the damage was excessive. He stated that his motion would be supported by affidavits, and, as we understand the record, thereafter he prepared, served, and later attempted to use, the affidavits of the individuals who had acted as jurors, showing how they had arrived at their verdict. The trial court refused to consider such affidavits, and such refusal was clearly correct. Code Civ. Proc. § 657; Fredericks v. Judah, 73 Cal. 604, 607, 15 Pac. 305; People v. Azoff, 105 Cal. 632, 634, 39 Pac. 59. If the defendant had desired that the jury by its verdict should specify each item of the account allowed, and each item disallowed, then and in that event, the defendant should have adopted at an earlier stage of the proceeding a different practice. Code Civ. Proc. § 624.

[4] When the plaintiff was introducing his case, among other witnesses he called the defendant to the stand. At this time the defendant contends that the plaintiff should be bound by the testimony so given by the defendant, and that the plaintiff is estopped from claiming under any other evidence produced on the matters testified to by the defendant. In this behalf the defendant cites and relies on 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 442. An examination will disclose that the citation is not in point. However, section

443b in the same book does state the rule applicable to the facts. See, also, Norwood v. Kenfield, 30 Cal. 393, 398, 399; Callahan v. Danziger, 32 Cal. App. 405, 408, 163 Pac. 65; Greenleaf v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co., 43 Cal. App. 691, 695, 696, 185 Pac. 872. There was no estoppel.

We have found no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 331

STANDARD LUMBER CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACC. COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 2533.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 29, 1922.)

1. Master and servant ⊂=414—Credibility of testimony in compensation case for Industrial Commission.

The Industrial Commission, being a fact-finding tribunal, may believe all or part of the testimony in a compensation case.

2. Master and servant ⊂=375(1)—Injury while acting outside employment not compensable.

If the injury occurs when the employee is performing an act entirely outside the employment, no award of compensation may be made.

3. Master and servant ⊂=417(7)—Finding on evidence in compensation case final.

Where two rational conclusions may be drawn from the evidence in Workmen's Compensation proceedings, one in favor of and one against the Industrial Accident Commission's award, such award may not be disturbed.

4. Master and servant ⊂=405(4)—Finding of compensable injury supported by evidence.

In a proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by an employee, injured after quitting work when a railroad push car on which he was riding ran away on a trip between the place of work and employer's central camp, held that there was substantial evidence to support the findings of the Industrial Accident Commission that he was employed to take the car in, and that his negligence, if any, was within his employment so as to entitle him to compensation.

Proceedings for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Thomas Truman, employee, opposed by the Standard Lumber Company, employer. An order awarding compensation was made by the Industrial Accident Commission of California, and the employer applied for certiorari. Affirmed.

Morrison, Dunne & Brobeck, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

ANDERSON, Justice pro tem. The proceeding is to review an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission to respondent Thomas Truman on account of injuries alleged to have been suffered by him while acting as the employee of the petitioner, Standard Lumber Company. Our consideration is limited to the determination of the question as to whether there was evidence to support the jurisdiction of the Commission to make the award—whether at the time Truman was injured he was an employee, working in the course of his employment. The word "respondent" when used herein will refer particularly to the respondent Truman.

The respondent was injured during the running away of a push car belonging to the petitioner. The push car had been placed on a railroad track at a place where petitioner was having work done upon its railroad. The car ran away on a trip over the portion of the railroad track between the place of work and a central camp or headquarters, maintained by petitioner. No one testified directly as to exactly how the respondent suffered injury. The respondent could not recall what occurred immediately before he was hurt, and he was unconscious for 40 hours after the accident.

Petitioner's points are as follows: First, that the injured employee, Truman, was not employed to operate and make use of the push car, and was guilty of willful misconduct in so doing; secondly, that if he was originally employed to operate the push car, he was, at the time of his injury, operating the same in a manner that made his acts wholly without the course of his employment. The latter contention is that the conduct of Truman was not merely negligence in the operation of the push car, within the scope of his employment, but was of such an exceptional and unusual nature as that it was really not related to the employment at all. Petitioner would concede that, if Truman had been employed to use the push car in furtherance of the employer's business and had used the push car in the usual way and injury had resulted through some act of neglect on his part the employer would be liable to compensate him under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831). Great Western Power Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 180, 149 Pac. 35.

While the testimony taken before the Commission was brief and not particularly clear, it did cover the essential matters in a case of this kind.

It appeared that the petitioner, Standard Lumber Company, was engaged in the lumbering business in the county of Tuolumne. It operated the railroad mentioned in connection with that business. Respondent Truman and about 40 other men were employed by petitioner in changing the rails of the railroad to rails of heavier weight. At one point on this railroad petitioner maintained a camp which the men left in the morning, and to which they returned in the evening. They traveled on foot. The places of work were a considerable distance from the camp, and on leaving camp in the morning the men took their lunches with them. It was down hill from the places of work to the camp. It seems that, at least in some sections, there was a very considerable grade to the railroad. No map of the line of railroad showing grades or curves was introduced by petitioner or respondent. The employees worked in at least two crews. Burns was foreman of all the work and superintendent of all the employees. The respondent, Truman, was a subforeman, and in charge of the bending crew, the crew that bent the rails being laid. He was injured in the evening after quitting time. During the day he and his crew had been engaged in their work at a point somewhat more distant from camp than where the main body of workmen under the immediate control of Burns were working.

At or in the region of the camp supplies would be obtained for use in the work which the men were engaged upon. There were two push cars used along the line of the railroad where the work was going forward. The injured employee, Truman, stated in parts of his testimony facts from which it could be argued that one push car was left in the control of his crew, and that occasionally he and his crew used a push car on returning to the camp in the evening for the purpose of bringing out, on the following morning, the lunches of the men or supplies needed in the doing of the work. His explanation as to the practice that prevailed as to such use of the push car by the members of his own crew was very much qualified or practically nullified by other portions of his own testimony and by the testimony of other witnesses. Probably the only fair inferences to be deduced from the entire testimony was that the push car in question was taken in from the work in the evening only in the event the foreman, Burns, directed this to be done; that the car taken in would usually be in charge of a man by the name of Pete Shotelle; that the foreman would have the man last named and a special crew of three others, whose names are not given in the testimony, take in the car when the work was over at the end of the day in the event supplies were to be sent out from the camp the next morning; that this push car was not used necessarily to bring out lunches for the men. As before stated, Truman's recollection of the circumstances of his injury was, according to the testimony, wholly destroyed. He repeatedly stated that he could not remember what transpired during the trip or during the period of about one-half hour prior to the time of the trip, on which he was injured. But the award does not depend on his testimony.

The petitioner contends that Truman had no business upon the push car at the time of his injury, that he was not employed to operate the push car, and that in fact before the push car started on its journey Truman was told that the car was not to go in. This is petitioner's first point. Truman admitted in one part of his testimony, that the particular car which was going into camp on the evening when he was injured probably started from the place where the men were working who were under the immediate supervision of Burns; that the crew under Truman had been working at a point further along the railroad. The facts last mentioned were testified to moreover by other witnesses. So the issue was finally narrowed down to the question of Truman's authority to be upon or to use the push car which was with the crew at work directly under Burns.

[1] It appeared that Truman left his place of work and arrived at the point along the line of railroad where Burns was and where the push car in question was. The men, Burns and Truman, were in speaking distance of each other. Certain witnesses testified specifically that they heard Burns say "Men, take the car in." Burns and another witness contradicted this. Burns declared that he told Truman not to take the car in. Burns was superintendent, a vice principal. He admits that it was Truman to whom he talked. The Commission could believe him as to that. It could believe him in part and the other witnesses in part in arriving at the facts bearing on the issue of employment. Such is the privilege of a fact-finding tribunal. Starck v. Pacific Electric Railway Co., 172 Cal. 277, 281, 156 Pac. 51, L. R. A. 1916E, 58.

It was testified to, and not denied, that at least one of the men with the car at the time of the accident worked under the immediate supervision of Burns, that is to say, in what was described as "Burns' Gang." It would not be unreasonable to assume that this Burns' man, so called, was in charge of the crew that took the car in. Neither side called any of these men. They had disappeared. Without question these men, including Truman, who was Burns' subordinate, "straw boss" as they called him, could rightfully obey Burns' command, although they might not have been the regular crew. Items of testimony tending to show that others than Burns' special crew took the push cars to the camp when occasion for their use existed, may be disregarded. The Commission, in view of the conflict in the testimony before it, could find that Truman was employed to take the car in.

Truman and three other men started to camp with the car after the command referred to; the testimony was that "it usually required * * * four men" to take the car in. At this time the brakes belonging to the car were not upon it. Before the Commission Truman claimed that the company was to blame for failure to supply the car with brakes. The testimony showed that the push car was a platform on four wheels. It evidently was similar to the low, flat car commonly used by section hands. Its brakes consisted of two pieces of timber. These would be set against the wheels to retard or stop the movement of the car. One witness testified that, "there is two sticks and an opening in the platform, and you press that down" The men got on the car and, in going with it to the camp it ran away, and they were injured—Truman seriously. When Truman claimed before the Commission that the car had no brakes, Burns spoke up and stated that Truman or the men on the car had used his (Burns') "gauge" for a brake and broken it. It is not clear from the record what this gauge was, or how serviceable it might have been. The usual "brakes" were later found —it is not clear where, with respect to the starting point of the car. They had not been used on the trip. The men may have negligently failed to note the absence of the brakes. They probably undertook to operate the car without using good brakes, but the record is not clear that the four men could not have taken the car to the camp without the usual brakes. The railroad was steep in places, but the grade was a railroad grade. Except as the men might be upon it, the car was not loaded. While there was testimony that a motor would be used to shove a loaded car upgrade to the place of work, the testimony also showed that the car was not a large car; that it would hold but a few men. The car was so low that a man could readily step from it. If the men were negligent, the Commission could find their negligence was within their employment.

Petitioner earnestly contends that this was a "push car," to be propelled by pushing; that the men were not supposed to get on the car; that the accident happened because they did get upon the car; that as a result they lost control of it; and that the car ran away down a steep grade and they were injured. The trouble with this argument is that the evidence does not show that the workmen never got upon the car in taking it on a trip of the length of a trip to camp. If there was no such practice, it would not result that the Commission could not infer and find that Truman's acts were but negligence within the scope of his employment. It is easy to infer and may be forcibly argued that these cars were ordinarily pushed about at the places of work in order to carry or distribute rails, supplies, and heavier tools used by the men. It is not easy to accept as conclusive the argument that men would always take the empty car on a long trip to camp without sitting upon it part of the time, particularly where the railroad grade appeared such as to permit of the practice without great risk. There was testimony that the men did ride on the push cars which were being run into camp. So far as the method of construction is concerned, the car, as revealed by the evidence, was as simple as a car could be made; the method of braking it was primitive. It would seem the most unskilled person might have quickly learned to operate it. There is nothing in the evidence to indicate the necessity for having a special crew to handle it. And the claim that the men had no right or duty on the platform of the car is not persuasive in the light of the testimony that "there is two sticks and an opening in the platform, and you press that down." In the absence of any better explanation in the record of the braking device, the conclusion is a fair one that a man must be on the platform of such a car to effectively manipulate these sticks through the "opening in the platform." Otherwise the car might speed beyond the reach of the man on the ground, before he could even have time to adjust the sticks in the "opening in the platform," or a sudden lurch of the car, if he were standing on the ground, might pull the brake sticks out of his hands. When Truman started on the trip he, according to Burns' testimony, was sitting on the car, shoving with his feet. It was evidently difficult for the Commission to understand Burns' failure to reprimand Truman or discharge him on the spot when he stated to Burns, "This is the way we go." It could well be urged that Burns' failure to say a word in reply to this remark showed: First, that it was likely that Truman was ordered to take the car in on the company's business; and, secondly, that he was not, at least, when and where the car was starting on its journey, doing an amazingly foolhardy thing in riding upon it. If the argument was not sound Burns, the man in authority, was allowing the company's property to be taken where it was not wanted, and from a place where it would be needed on the ensuing day. Evidently he was not worried over any great possibility of peril to Truman and the other three men. It appeared affirmatively that Truman had always been a faithful, reliable, and obedient employee. The terms or expressions, "course of employment" and "scope of authority," are referred to in 26 Cyc. 1533, 1534. This very significant declaration is there made: "The purpose of the act, rather than its method of performance, is the test of scope of employment." Of course, the act of an employee, even though it was intended to forward the purpose of the employer, might be of such an exceptional and unusual nature as that a court would hold that it was not reasonably within the scope of the employment. Here the employee was using the very device he had been ordered to use; he was taking it into camp but was not careful in doing so.

[2] If the injury occurs when the employee is performing an act entirely outside the employment, no award may be made. Engels Copper Min. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 183 Cal. 714, 192 Pac. 845, 11 A. L. R. 785.

[3] Where two rational conclusions may be drawn from the evidence, one in favor of and one against the award made by the Commission, the award may not be disturbed. Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 200 Pac. 17; Southern Pacific Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 177 Cal. 378, 170 Pac. 882.

In the case next mentioned an award had been made by the Commission in favor of one Coelho. He lost his life while employed as a deck hand on a barge. He had nothing to do with the operation of the barge, but he and the other deck hands were transported thereon from place to place where the barge was loaded and unloaded. Coehlo exposed himself to a risk of falling from the barge by unnecessarily taking a position near its edge at a time when the waters of the estuary, where the barge then was, were somewhat rough. One of the other deck hands specifically warned him of his danger. He remained leaning against an upright near the edge of the barge. That was the last seen of him alive. His body was found in the water. When warned, he did not go inside the cabin on the barge. That would have been the safe place for him to be, and there was evidence to show commands had been given to the deck hands to be there. His body was found in the bay and no one testified as to exactly what occurred immediately preceding the accident. The record left that matter to inferences, as does the record here. The decision was by the Supreme Court in bank, and the remarks of the court have a bearing on the question of claimant's conduct:

"Nor can we say that his position was so perilous that he displayed a spirit of bravado and reckless foolhardiness by occupying it. Taking the trip from San Francisco to Oakland on that barge so that upon arrival at the latter city he might be ready to assist in removing the cargo was a part of Coelho's duty. Therefore he was in the course of his employment when the accident occurred if he was not either recklessly or in defiance of orders occupying a place of great peril. While his conduct was not careful and was not characterized by such caution as would be entirely commendable in one afloat upon such a craft, we cannot say that it amounted to willful misconduct. * * * As Coelho was going on his employer's business by the very conveyance furnished by the employer for that purpose, there can be no question of the correctness of the finding that the accident occurred in the course of and arose out of his employment. In re Donovan, 217 Mass. 76 (Ann. Cas. 1915C, 778, 104 N. E. 431)." W. R. Rideout Co. v. Pillsbury, 173 Cal. 132, 159 Pac. 435.

[4] We think there was substantial evidence supporting the findings of the Commission, and that the award should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 354

ROBERTSON et al. v. MELVILLE et al.
(Civ. 3879.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 4, 1923.)

1. Reformation of instruments ⟸8—Any valuable consideration will support action.

While equity will not reform a purely voluntary deed, a valuable consideration, however small, will support a conveyance, and ordinarily entitle grantee to maintain an action to correct a mutual mistake in the deed.

2. Reformation of instruments ⟸36(1)—Allegations as to consideration held sufficient to warrant reformation of deed; "sold."

A complaint, alleging that defendant "sold" all of certain property represented as having a total frontage of 65 feet, but that the deed omitted a 5-foot strip, which defendant refused to convey on plaintiff's demand, and that plaintiff paid all of the agreed consideration, held sufficient to warrant reformation of the deed, though no facts showing the adequacy of the consideration were alleged; the necessary inference from the allegation that defendant "sold" the land being that there was a pecuniary consideration.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Sold.]

3. Pleading ⟸34(1) — Allegations liberally construed, and defects not affecting parties' substantial rights disregarded.

The allegations of a pleading must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties, and any error or defect not affecting their substantial rights must be disregarded, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 472, 475.

4. Reformation of instruments ⟸36(3)—Complaint, alleging facts from which fraud or mistake may be inferred, is sufficient.

To state a cause of action, under Civ. Code, § 3399, for reformation of a deed, which, through fraud, mutual mistake or mistake of one party known to or suspected by the other, does not truly express their intention, it is not necessary that the word "mistake" appear in the complaint, it being sufficient if the facts alleged, or the fair inference from them, show fraud or mistake.

5. Reformation of instruments ⟸36(3)—Complaint held sufficient to authorize reformation of deed for mutual mistake.

A complaint, alleging that defendant "offered for sale" and "actually sold" a lot having a total frontage of 65 feet, that she "represented' to plaintiff that she was selling and conveying "all of the above-described property," that she "intended" to convey the total frontage of 65 feet, and that plaintiff "acted under the belief" that all of the property had been conveyed to her, held sufficient to state a cause of action, under Civ. Code, § 3399, for reformation of a deed, which omitted a 5-foot strip, on the ground of mutual mistake, though the word "mistake" did not appear.

6. Reformation of instruments ⟸46—Finding that strip of land agreed to be conveyed was omitted from deed through mistake held warranted, though word "mistake" did not appear in complaint.

Where the court found that all the allegations of a complaint, in which facts necessary to entitle plaintiff to reformation of a deed for mutual mistake in omitting a 5-foot strip were directly stated or necessarily inferable from those stated, were true, it was warranted in finding that such strip was omitted through "inadvertence or mistake," though the word "mistake" did not appear in the complaint, it being its duty to determine from the facts alleged and proved whether defendant's conduct was the result of a concealed, fraudulent intent or of mistake.

7. Appeal and error ⟸1071(5)—Findings going beyond language of issues tendered by complaint, stating facts sufficient to constitute cause of action, not prejudicial to defendants.

Where the complaint states all the essential facts necessary to constitute a cause of action for reformation of a deed, and the facts alleged are found to be true, findings going beyond the language of the issues tendered by the complaint are not essential to support a judgment for plaintiff, and hence are not prejudicial to defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by Helen Robertson and husband against Ida M. Melville and husband. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Edward Winterer, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Turnbull, Heffron & Kelley, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Defendants, who are husband and wife, appeal from a judgment reforming a deed which the wife, Ida M. Melville, as grantor, had executed to the plaintiff Helen Robertson, as the grantee. The deed was reformed by correcting a misdescription of the land. The evidence is not in the record; the case coming here on the judgment roll alone.

The allegations of the complaint are substantially these: The defendant Ida M. Melville was the owner and in possession of a parcel of land in the city of Los Angeles having a total frontage of 65 feet. It consisted of lot 3 of the G. M. Lashley tract, having a frontage of 60 feet, and the south 5 feet of the north 345 feet of the east 117.8 feet of lot 3 of Towner and Garbutt's subdivision of the S. W. Little tract. All of the property—i. e., lot 3 of the G. M. Lashley tract and the adjoining 5-foot strip in Towner and Garbutt's subdivision—was "offered for sale and actually sold by said Ida M. Melville to the plaintiff Helen Robertson." The vendor represented to the vendee that she was selling and conveying all of the above-mentioned property, and at all times referred to the property sold as having a total frontage of 65 feet. The deed which the vendor executed to the vendee described and conveyed all of lot 3 in the G. M. Lashley tract, but failed to make mention of the 5-foot strip in Towner and Garbutt's subdivision, with the result that the land conveyed had a frontage of but 60 feet, instead of the 65-foot frontage which the vendor had offered for sale and had "actually sold" to the vendee. Mrs. Melville "intended to convey to said Helen Robertson all of the property purchased" by the latter, and until two days prior to the commencement of the action Mrs. Robertson "acted under the belief that there had been conveyed to her by said Ida M. Melville all of the property so purchased." Immediately on ascertaining that the deed omitted the 5-foot strip, Mrs. Robertson demanded a conveyance thereof from Mrs. Melville, but the latter has refused all compliance with the demand. Mrs. Robertson paid to Mrs. Melville all of the agreed consideration. The complaint does not allege what was the consideration that was paid for the property, but the trial court found that it was $4,500.

[1, 2] Though no demurrer was filed in the court below appellants now claim that the complaint does not state a cause of action. In support of this contention it first is asserted that the action was brought and intended as one for specific performance, and that, since the complaint nowhere alleges facts showing the adequacy of the consideration received by Mrs. Melville, the pleading is insufficient as a complaint for specific performance. The argument rests on a false premise. The cause of action alleged in the complaint is one for the reformation of the deed, and not for the specific performance of the contract whereby the land had been sold. It is a cause of action for the reformation of a deed which had been executed in an attempted performance of the contract. It is true the complaint is by no means a model, and it doubtless could have been successfully demurred to on the ground of uncertainty in the allegation respecting the nature of the consideration given for the land. Nevertheless, it does appear that the consideration was valuable; i. e., that it was a pecuniary consideration. This is a necessary implication of the allegation that

Mrs. Melville "sold" the land to Mrs. Robertson; the word "sold" importing a pecuniary consideration. Since, therefore, the complaint shows, by necessary inference, that there was a pecuniary consideration, there is a sufficient allegation of consideration to warrant a reformation of the deed. It may be conceded that equity will not reform a purely voluntary deed; for one who accepts another's bounty cannot be heard to say that something else should have been given. Enos v. Stewart, 138 Cal. 112, 70 Pac. 1005. But a valuable consideration, however small, will support a conveyance, and a consideration which will support a conveyance ordinarily is sufficient to entitle the grantee to maintain an action to correct a mutual mistake in the deed. It is alleged that Mrs. Melville received the consideration which it was agreed should be paid for the total frontage of 65 feet. This being the case, the vendor cannot now insist on keeping all of the consideration that was paid for a piece of property having a 65-foot frontage, and while conveying a portion of the land, refuse to convey the whole. Having received and kept the consideration that was paid to her for the whole parcel, she is bound, in conscience, to correct the mistake. In Mason v. Moulden, 58 Ind. 1—an action to reform a deed by correcting the description of the land intended to be conveyed—the court said:

"The case is not entirely like one where specific performance of a contract is sought. Here the vendor attempted to perform the contract, and executed a deed for that purpose. The aid of the court is required only to correct a mistake into which the parties mutually fell in the execution of their purpose, the one to convey, and the other to receive, the title to the land."

In this same case the Indiana court further said:

"Elizabeth was a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and mere inadequacy of consideration is no ground for withholding relief by way of reforming the deed, and thus giving her what she bought, and what her vendor intended to convey, and would, but for the mistake, have conveyed."

To the same effect are Baker v. Pyatt, 108 Ind. 61, 9 N. E. 112; Comstock v. Coon, 135 Ind. 640, 35 N. E. 909; Citizens' National Bank v. Judy, 146 Ind. 322, 43 N. E. 259; and Rea v. Wilson, 112 Iowa, 517, 84 N. W. 539.

[3, 4] It next is urged that the complaint does not state a cause of action for reformation because there is no allegation of fraud, or of mutual mistake, or of a mistake by one of the parties known to or suspected by the other, citing section 3399 of the Civil Code, which reads:

"When, through fraud or a mutual mistake of the parties, or a mistake of one party, which the other at the time knew or suspected, a written contract does not truly express the intention of the parties, it may be revised on the application of a party aggrieved, so as to express that intention, so far as it can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third persons, in good faith and for value."

While, as we have stated, the complaint is by no means to be commended as a precedent, we think it would have withstood the test of a general demurrer had one been filed. In the absence of a demurrer great liberality has been indulged in order to sustain faulty complaints in actions to reform written instruments. Newton v. Hull, 90 Cal. 487, 495, 27 Pac. 429; Seegelken v. Corey, 93 Cal. 92, 95, 28 Pac. 849; Peasley v. McFadden, 68 Cal. 611, 616, 10 Pac. 179; Ward v. Waterman, 85 Cal. 488, 24 Pac. 930; Higgins v. Parsons, 65 Cal. 281, 3 Pac. 881. As was said in Peasley v. McFadden, supra:

"In the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its effect, its allegations must be liberally construed, with a view to substantial justice between the parties, and in every stage of an action, the court must disregard any error or defect in the pleadings which does not affect the substantial rights of the parties. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 472, 475."

It is true that the word "mistake" nowhere appears in the complaint; but if the essential facts have been alleged it was not necessary that plaintiffs should have characterized them. It is the facts, and not the pleader's conclusions, from which the chancellor is to draw the conclusion that there was a mistake in which both parties participated, or that there was a mistake on the part of one known or suspected by the other, or that the erroneous description was due to the vendor's fraud. In other words, it is sufficient if the facts alleged, or the inference to be drawn from them, by fair intendment show fraud or mistake.

[5] Here all the facts necessary to entitle plaintiffs to a reformation of the deed which are not directly stated are necessarily inferable from those which are stated. It appears from the complaint that Mrs. Melville "offered for sale" and "actually sold" the total frontage of 65 feet; that she "represented" to Mrs. Robertson "that she was selling and conveying all of the above-described property"; that she "intended" to convey to Mrs. Robertson the total frontage of 65 feet; and that Mrs. Robertson "acted under the belief" that there had been conveyed to her all of the property. From these allegations it clearly appears that the true agreement was well understood by both parties, but that, contrary to the vendee's belief, the deed, which presumably was drafted by the vendor of by a scrivener employed by her, did not correctly embody all of the agreement, in that it omitted a part of the land which the vendor represented she was selling and which she intended to convey and which was "actually sold." The fair inference from the allegation that the vendor "intended" to convey the total frontage of 65 feet, and that the vendee "believed" that all of it had been conveyed to her, is that the 5-foot strip was omitted from the deed through mistake on the part of the vendor in which the vendee participated; that is, that the misdescription was the result of mutual mistake. The facts having been clearly stated, the pleading cannot be held defective merely because the plaintiffs did not know and could not allege what was passing in the grantor's mind at the time of the conveyance. They knew that the vendor had "offered for sale" and had "sold" all of the 65-foot frontage, and that she had represented that she was selling all of it, and that therefore the 5-foot frontage could have been omitted from the deed only through fraud or mistake—but which, it ordinarily would be impossible to say.

[6, 7] The trial court found, in substance and effect, that all the allegations of the complaint are true. In other findings that court went somewhat beyond the precise language of the issues as tendered by the complaint. Thus, it is expressly found that the 5-foot strip was omitted from the deed through "inadvertence and mistake," notwithstanding that the word "mistake" nowhere appears in the complaint. This the court was warranted in doing; for it was its duty to determine from the facts alleged and proved whether Mrs. Melville's conduct was the offspring of a concealed fraudulent intent or whether it was the progeny of mistake. As to the other findings in which the court somewhat amplifies the facts as alleged in the complaint, it may be said of them that they cannot possibly prejudice the appellants. For the reasons already given, the complaint states all of the essential facts necessary to constitute a cause of action for reformation of the deed. And since the facts as alleged in the complaint are found to be true, it follows that such of the other findings as may go beyond the language of the issues as tendered by the complaint are not essential to the support of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WORKS, J.; CRAIG, J.

190 Cal. 416

Ex parte JORDAN. (Cr. 2549.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1923.)

Criminal law ⊜1208(9)—Indeterminate sentence held not void.

An indeterminate sentence for robbery is not void for uncertainty, since in effect it is for the maximum term provided by law, which is life imprisonment, notwithstanding Pen. Code, § 213, making robbery punishable by imprisonment for not less than one year, section 671, providing that, where a crime is punishable by imprisonment for a term not less than a specified number of years, and no limit to the duration of such imprisonment is declared, the court may impose a life sentence, nor section 1168, providing for indeterminate sentences.

In Bank.

Application by John Jordan for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the warden of San Quentin prison to secure release of petitioner as improperly sentenced. Writ denied.

John Jordan, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner was given an indeterminate sentence for robbery. The petitioner claims that the sentence is void for uncertainty, citing People v. Sama (Cal. Sup.) 207 Pac. 893; People v. Mendosa, 178 Cal. 509, 173 Pac. 998; In re Lee, 177 Cal. 690, 171 Pac. 958; Penal Code, §§ 213, 671, and 1168. The sentence was, in effect for the maximum term provided by law. In re Lee, supra. The maximum term provided by law was life imprisonment.

The petition is denied.

WILBUR, C. J., and MEYERS, SEAWELL, WASTE, and KERRIGAN, JJ., concur.

---

190 Cal. 401

In re KERR et al. (S. F. 10573.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1923.)

Mandamus ⊜3(8)—Writ to compel hearing of petition for distribution denied, where other statutory remedy existed.

An application for a writ of mandamus to compel a judge of the superior court to hear a petition for distribution, where money has been paid to the state treasurer under Code Civ. Proc. § 1737, by a public administrator, will be denied, petitioner's remedy being by a proceeding in the superior court under section 1272a as added by St. 1917, p. 254, § 2, relating to proceedings after judgment by persons claiming estates.

In Bank.

Application by Thomas J. Kerr and others for a writ of mandate to be directed to the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas F. Graham, Judge, requiring him to hear and determine a petition for distribution. Writ denied.

H. H. Eaton, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

PER CURIAM. The application for a writ of mandamus to compel the respondent to proceed and hear the petition for distribution in this case, where money has been paid to the state treasurer under provisions of section 1737 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is denied, on the ground that petitioners' remedy is by proceedings in the superior court of Sacramento county under the provisions of section 1272a of the Code of Civil Procedure (Stats. 1917, p. 254).

All concur.

---

190 Cal. 389

GRIFFITH v. OAK RIDGE OIL CO. et al. (L. A. 7301.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1923.)

1. Negligence ⊜56(1) — Defendant's negligence need not be sole cause of injury.

The negligence of defendant need not be the sole cause of the injury to entitle plaintiff to damages therefor; it being sufficient that it is a proximate cause of the injury.

2. Trial ⊜296(4, 5)—Instruction held not to require contributory negligence to be sole cause of injury in view of other instructions.

A portion of an instruction, which stated that negligence on the part of either plaintiff or defendant was of no consequence unless it was the proximate cause of the injury—that is, the efficient cause which necessarily sets the other causes in operation—was not erroneous as stating that contributory negligence was no defense unless it was the sole cause of the injury, where it followed a statement that, to find a verdict for plaintiff, the jury must not only find that defendant was negligent and his negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, but also that plaintiff was not guilty of negligence contributing proximately thereto, and the court also gave 12 other instructions upon the subject of contributory negligence, in several of which the jury were told the plaintiff could not recover if his negligence contributed in the slightest degree towards the accident.

3. Appeal and error ⊜1066—Abstract instruction that operation of automobile at unlawful speed was negligence held not erroneous.

In an action for injuries received in an automobile collision, an instruction that the operation of an automobile at an unlawful speed was in itself negligence was not prejudicial error, even if there was no evidence defendant was operating his car at a prohibited speed, where the instruction was merely introductory to the portion immediately following that it was not necessarily permissible to operate the car at the speed limit fixed by law, for a less rate of speed might, under the particular circumstances, be negligent.

4. Trial ⊂260(10)—Instruction denying recovery for loss of wages properly refused as not in issue and as excluded by other instructions.

In an action for personal injuries, where the complaint made no claim for loss of wages, and plaintiff testified upon the trial that he lost no wages because his employers continued payment thereof while he was disabled, and the court explicitly enumerated the elements for which they might award compensation, not including loss of wages, it was not error to refuse to give a requested instruction not to award anything on account of loss of wages.

5. Trial ⊂315 — Verdict by averaging not agreed to in advance is not misconduct.

It is not misconduct by the jury to strike an average of the opinions of each juror as to the amount of damages, where there was no agreement in advance to abide by the average as the verdict of the jury, but it was accepted as the proper verdict after discussion.

6. Damages ⊂132(8)—$8,363 for permanent injuries to arm of pianist held not excessive.

Where plaintiff's injuries prevented him from lying down for four weeks immediately following the accident, and at the time of the trial, 11 months after the accident, his right arm was crooked at the elbow, two fingers on his left hand were paralyzed, and he could not raise that hand to the back of his neck, his occupation had been the demonstration of pianos, and he could play after the accident with one hand only, and some at least of his injuries were permanent, a verdict awarding $8,363 was not excessive.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Pat R. Parker, Judge.

Action by J. J. Griffith against the Oak Ridge Oil Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Kemp, Mitchell & Silberberg, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Harry K. Sargent and Floyd L. Anderson, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

MYERS, J. This was an action to recover damages for personal injuries arising out of a collision at the intersection of two highways, between an automobile driven by the plaintiff and one driven by the defendant Buzzard as employee and agent of the defendant Oak Ridge Oil Company. Defendants' answer, in addition to denying the allegations of the complaint, pleaded contributory negligence as an affirmative defense. Verdict was for plaintiff and defendants appeal, upon the grounds of error in the instructions, misconduct of jury, and excessive damages.

It is conceded that the evidence is sufficient to support the implied findings of defendants' negligence and plaintiff's freedom from contributory negligence, and it is also conceded that there was substantial evidence tending to prove contributory negligence, so that error in the instructions upon that issue would be material.

Defendants complain of the following language in one of the instructions given:

"Negligence on the part of either the plaintiff or defendant is of no consequence in the case unless you also find that such negligence was a proximate cause of the injury. By proximate cause is meant the efficient cause; the one that necessarily sets the other causes in operation. It is that which is the actual cause of the loss, whether operating directly, or by putting intervening agencies, the operation of which could not be reasonably avoided, in motion, by which the loss is produced; it is the cause to which such loss should be attributed."

[1-2] It is claimed that this instruction told the jury, in effect, that negligence on the part of either party, to be of consequence in the case, must be the sole cause of the injury, and defendants assert that such a rule would be correct as applied to the negligence of the defendant and incorrect as applied to contributory negligence of the plaintiff. That is not the law. The law does not require that negligence of the defendant must be the sole cause of the injury complained of in order to entitle the plaintiff to damages therefor. All that is required in either respect is that the negligence in question shall be a proximate cause of the injury complained of, and that is precisely what the instruction told the jury. The language quoted was but a small portion of a long general instruction given upon the subject of negligence and contributory negligence, which first defined negligence and then correctly stated the rules as to the burden of proof of negligence and contributory negligence. Then followed the portion quoted, and ended as follows:

"In order, therefore, to find a verdict for the plaintiff you must not only find from a preponderance of all the evidence that the defendant was negligent, but also that such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury to the plaintiff; and you must further find that the evidence fails to show by a preponderance thereof that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence contributing proximately thereto; otherwise your verdict must be for the defendant."

If the jurors could have had any doubt, after reading that instruction concerning the rule that contributory negligence of plaintiff, in order to defeat his cause of action, need not be the sole cause of the injury, that doubt must have been dispelled by the 12 additional instructions given them upon the subject of contributory negligence, in several of which the jurors were told, in effect, that if negligence of the plaintiff "contributed in the slightest degree towards such accident, then your verdict must be for the defendants." This does not present the situtation claimed by appellants of two conflicting instructions upon the same subject, one correct and the other erroneous.

[3] Appellants also complain of the following instruction:

"The court instructs you as a matter of law that it is negligence to operate a motor vehicle at any rate of speed prohibited by law. If, therefore, you find that the defendant operated the vehicle in question at a rate of speed greater than the speed limit fixed by law, to wit, 30 miles per hour at the place in question, you will find as a matter of law that the defendant was negligent in operating such vehicle at such speed," on the ground that there was no evidence to support such a finding, and that the giving of the instruction under those circumstances was prejudicial error, citing Wallis v. Southern Pacific Co., 184 Cal. 662, 195 Pac. 408, 15 A. L. R. 117. It is undoubtedly true that the giving of an instruction predicated upon a hypothetical finding which would be wholly unsupported by evidence may, under some circumstances, be prejudicial, as in the Wallis Case, wherein the defense chiefly relied upon was contributory negligence, and the court instructed the jurors under the last clear chance rule as to circumstances whereunder they might return a verdict for the plaintiff, notwithstanding his contributory negligence, and this court determined that there was no evidence to justify the application of the last clear chance rule. In the instant case, however, the language above quoted was but a portion of an instruction, and was immediately followed by the following:

"But this does not mean that it is necessarily permissible to operate at the speed limit so fixed by law, for a less rate of speed may under the particular circumstances be negligent," and the court thereupon proceeded to carefully and correctly advise the jurors of the circumstances and conditions under which they might find a rate of speed less than the maximum fixed by law to be negligent. It thus becomes apparent that the language complained of was intended to be introductory and explanatory of that which immediately followed it, and that the jury could not have been misled thereby.

[4] Appellants complain of the court's refusal to give an instruction requested by them, to the effect that in assessing damages the jurors could not award anything on account of loss of wages. This was properly refused, for the reasons that nothing was claimed in the complaint for loss of wages, and the plaintiff testified upon the trial that he lost no wages, because his employers continued the payment thereof during all the time that he was disabled, and, lastly, because the court did explicitly enumerate to the jury the elements for which they might award compensation, and in this enumeration it excluded the element of the loss of wages.

[5] It is claimed that the jurors were guilty of misconduct, in that they arrived at the amount of their verdict by the system of averages; that is, that they agreed in advance to ascertain the average of the amounts proposed by each, and to abide by the result so ascertained as their verdict. Upon the hearing of the motion for new trial affidavits of two jurors were presented which tend to support this claim. In opposition thereto affidavits of five jurors were presented by the respondent, each to the effect that there was no agreement to accept the average until after it was ascertained how much the average amounted to, and then only after further discussion and deliberation. If the latter affidavits were true, there was, of course, no misconduct on the part of the jurors, and no basis in their action for the granting of a new trial (McDonnell v. Stage Co., 120 Cal. 476, 52 Pac. 725), and the trial court so found, in effect, by denying the motion.

[6] Lastly, it is claimed that the damages awarded were excessive. The amount awarded for general damages was $8,363. It appeared from the evidence that for three or four weeks immediately following the accident it was absolutely impossible for the plaintiff to lie down; that during all of that period he was compelled to sit on the edge of a chair, night and day, suffering intensely, and never able to sleep longer than 30 minutes at a time; that at the time of the trial, 11 months after the accident, his right arm was crooked at the elbow, two fingers on the left hand paralyzed both as to sensation and as to motion, the thumb drawn and without sensation; that he could not raise his left hand to the back of his neck, and was unable to dress himself; that for six years he had been in the employ of a piano factory, in whose services it was necessary for him to play the piano to demonstrate the instruments, and that as a result of the accident he is able to play with one hand only. It was also testified that his injuries were to some extent permanent; the extent of permanency not being definitely stated. The amount awarded by the jury was approved by the trial judge in denying the motion for new trial. Under these circumstances it is clearly apparent that we cannot say that the verdict was "so plainly and outrageously excessive as to suggest, at the first blush, passion or prejudice or corruption on the part of the jury." Howland v. Railway Co., 110 Cal. 523, 42 Pac. 986;

Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 181 Cal. 366, 184 Pac. 672, 12 A. L. R. 1007.

The appeal is without merit, and the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; KERRIGAN, J.; LAWLOR, J.; LENNON, J.; WASTE, J.; SEAWELL, J.

---

190 Cal. 384

HALPERN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR ALAMEDA COUNTY et al.
(S. F. 8427.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1923.)

1. Certiorari ⟸58—Record must be taken as true.

The province of certiorari is to review the record of an inferior court or tribunal, and to determine therefrom whether jurisdiction has been exceeded, and the reviewing court is bound by the record, which must be taken as true.

2. Courts ⟸116(3)—Have jurisdiction to correct mistakes in entry of orders.

The Superior Court, like other courts, has inherent power over its records, and may at all times correct mere clerical errors made by the clerk in entering an order in the minutes, so that the record may truly state what was the order of the court.

3. Evidence ⟸82—Correction or amendment of record conclusively presumed to have been proper on collateral attack.

Any correction or amendment of its record made by the superior court is conclusively presumed to have been properly made when such record is collaterally drawn in question.

4. Appeal and error ⟸440—Appeal does not deprive lower court of jurisdiction to correct record.

The right of a lower court to amend its record to conform to the truth is not suspended or impeded by an appeal, where the amendment does not affect any substantial rights of the appellant, and consists in the correction of a clerical mistake appearing upon the face of the record, or where the lower court has found that the record disclosed that the entry on the minutes did not correctly state what was the order of the court.

5. Certiorari ⟸58 — Allegations of petition and counter affidavits cannot be considered.

Allegations in the verified petition for certiorari to review the entry nunc pro tunc of an order amending an order granting a new trial, and the counter affidavits of the judge to the true order originally made by the court, cannot be considered where the record stated that the order as originally entered was not correct, and the amendment was made so that the entry would conform to the true order.

6. Certiorari ⟸29—Does not lie to review failure to give notice of correction of record.

An objection that an order correcting the record which petitioners sought to review by certiorari was in excess of jurisdiction because made ex parte without notice to petitioner cannot be considered in certiorari proceeding, which does not lie to review errors in the exercise of jurisdiction, however gross or glaring they may be.

In Bank.

Certiorari by Jacob Halpern against the Superior Court in and for the County of Alameda and A. F. St. Sure, the Presiding Judge of Department No. 2 thereof, to review an order amending nunc pro tunc an order granting a new trial. Writ discharged.

Jacob Halpern, Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon and J. E. Reardon, all of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Ford & Johnson, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari to review an order of the superior court of Alameda county purporting to amend, nunc pro tunc, a previous order of the court granting a new trial in the action of Clarence Garns, by his guardian ad litem, versus Jacob Halpern, who is the petitioner here. It appears from the return that the action was one for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by reason of the purported negligence of the defendant. Judgment was entered in favor of the minor and against the petitioner, whereupon the plaintiff, being apparently dissatisfied with the amount of the judgment, made a motion for a new trial, specifying as grounds of the motion, first, insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict, and, second, that said verdict was against law.

On the 17th day of February, 1922, the clerk of the court entered a minute order in the records thereof, which is as follows:

"It is ordered by the court that the motion for a new trial in the above-entitled cause be, and the same is hereby, granted and the cause continued to February 24, 1922, at 10 o'clock a. m. of said day, to be reset."

On March 2 following, the defendant took an appeal from this order. In his petition for the writ here he alleges that thereafter, and on August 14, 1922, and after the appeal was duly taken and perfected, and after the petitioner, as such appellant, had filed his opening brief, upon an ex parte application made by the plaintiff's attorneys in the cause, and in the absence of petitioner and any of his counsel, and without any notice to petitioner and his attorneys, or any one representing him, the lower court made and entered an order purporting to modify the previous order granting the new trial. The amendatory order reads as follows:

"[Title of court and cause.] Order amending order granting new trial. It appearing to the court that plaintiff heretofore upon due notice therefor moved said court for a new trial of said cause, and that the court granted said motion upon the grounds stated in said notice, and that the record made by the clerk of said court does not correctly show the order which was in fact made by the court, and that said record discloses that the entry on the minutes does not correctly give what was the order of the court, it is hereby ordered, that the order granting said motion be, and the same is hereby, amended nunc pro tunc by adding to the order heretofore entered after the word 'granted' the following to wit: I. 'Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict.' Dated this 14th day of August, 1922."

It is the contention of the petitioner here that the Superior Court exceeded its jurisdiction in making the amendatory order of August 14th. Briefly, the position of the petitioner is that the original order was not made inadvertently, or by mistake, nor did the order as entered contain any clerical misprision; further, that the order is an attempt to correct a judicial error, which may not be done in the manner followed by the court in this instance.

[1] Whether the contentions of the petitioner are right or wrong is not a question material to the consideration of this application. Neither are we now concerned with the question whether the lower court should have made the amendment to its previous order without notice thereof being given to the petitioner. The province of certiorari is to review the record of an inferior court, board or tribunal, and to determine from the record whether such court, board, or tribunal has exceeded its jurisdiction. The reviewing court is bound by the record, which must be taken as true. If the contrary is the fact, it must be corrected by motion or suggestion to the court below. Roe v. Superior Court, 60 Cal. 93. If the court had jurisdiction, and the recitals of the judgment or order are sufficient to sustain it, those recitals are conclusive. 4 Cal. Juris. p. 1107, § 69; White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 60, 64, 42 Pac. 480. As was said in Central Pac. R. R. Co. v. Placer County, 46 Cal. 667, 670:

"It has been settled by a long series of decisions in this state that a writ of certiorari brings up for review only the question whether the inferior officer, court, or tribunal, has exceeded its jurisdiction, and cannot be used as a mere writ of error for the correction of mistakes, either in law or fact, committed by the inferior tribunal within the limits of its jurisdiction."

See Buckley v. Superior Court, 96 Cal. 119, 120, 31 Pac. 8.

[2, 3] In the matter before us, it must be conceded that the superior court had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Courts have inherent power over their records, and may at all times correct mere clerical errors made by the clerk in entering an order in the minutes, so that it may truly state what was the order of the court, by setting forth all its terms.

"The right of a court of general jurisdiction to amend or correct its records so that they shall speak the truth is too well recognized to need any argument (Crim v. Kessing, 89 Cal. 486, 23 Am. St. Rep. 491); and any correction or amendment of its records is conclusively presumed to have been properly made, when such record is collaterally drawn in question, or is used as evidence, or relied upon in support of any other proceeding (Paige v. Roeding, 96 Cal. 391; Cockrill v. Clyma, 98 Cal. 123)." Garoutte v. Haley, 104 Cal. 497, 500, 38 Pac. 194.

That any error or defect in a record occurring through acts of omission or commission by the clerk in entering of record the judgment or proceedings of the court may be corrected at any time by the court, on its own motion, or on motion of either party, was held in Brush v. Pac. Elec. Ry. Co. (Cal. App.) 208 Pac. 997, in which case a hearing in this court was denied.

[4] The right of a lower court to amend its record to conform to the truth is not suspended or impeded by an appeal, where the amendment does not affect any substantial rights of the appellant, and consists of the correction of a clerical mistake appearing upon the face of the record. Fay v. Stubenrauch, 141 Cal. 573, 575, 75 Pac. 174. The same rule should apply where, as here, the lower court has found "that said record discloses that the entry on the minutes does not correctly give what was the order of the court."

[5] In answer to the contention of the petitioner that the omission does not appear from the record, and that the amendment, in fact, amounted to the correction of a judicial error, and was one affecting the substantial rights of the appellant because it changed the effect of the order granting the new trial, and also because it was made after appellant had gone through the formality and incurred the costs of an appeal, it is only necessary to repeat that, upon an application to this court for a writ of certiorari, the record sought to be reviewed imports absolute verity, and the allegations of the petition that the record does not speak the truth may not be considered. If the minutes of the court below do not correctly show the proceedings had, an application should be made in that court to correct the error. Hoffmann v. Superior Court, 79 Cal. 475, 476, 21 Pac. 862; Borchard v. Supervisors, 144 Cal. 10, 14, 77 Pac. 708. The allegations of the verified petition here and the counter affidavits of the trial judge filed in the court below are therefore dehors the record, and may not be considered by us in this action.

[6] Petitioner contends that, as he had no notice, by motion or otherwise, of the ex parte application, and of the action of the trial court in amending the order granting the new trial, such action of the court was in excess of its jurisdiction. Like the other contentions made by the petitioner, this objection has no place in this hearing for a writ of certiorari, for the reasons we have already given. As the court had undoubted jurisdiction to amend its records, errors in the exercise of such jurisdiction, however gross or glaring they may be, may not be examined into in this proceeding (Sherer v. Superior Court, 94 Cal. 354, 29 Pac. 716; Roberts v. Police Court, 185 Cal. 65, 195 Pac. 1053), but only, as has been pointed out, in a proceeding in the lower court for that purpose (Roe v. Superior Court, supra; Hoffmann v. Superior Court, supra). On an appeal from any judgment necessarily affected by the order of the lower court correcting its records, or on direct appeal from the order itself, if it be one specially made after judgment, a review can be had of errors of law occurring in connection with the making of such correction. Since in this case we are not permitted to consider any matters dehors the record, and as there is nothing in the record to show that the lower court has exceeded its jurisdiction in any of the matters complained of, no question of law is presented. Barber v. Board of Supervisors, 42 Cal. 630, 635.

The writ is discharged.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; KERRIGAN, J.; MYERS, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.

---

190 Cal. 395

LUCKENBACH v. LAER et al. (L. A. 7047, 7048.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸113(1)—Orders refusing to vacate orders not appealable.

Orders refusing to vacate former orders are not appealable unless so designated by the Code.

2. Appeal and error ⟸82(3)—Orders after judgment refusing to vacate orders appointing receiver and authorizing him to sue are appealable.

Special orders, after final judgment against a corporation, refusing to vacate orders appointing a receiver and authorizing him to sue certain persons, are appealable. Code Civ. Proc. § 963, subd. 2.

3. Appeal and error ⟸148—Persons injuriously affected may appeal from orders refusing to vacate orders in action to which they were not parties.

Persons injuriously affected by appealable orders in an action to which they were not parties may make themselves parties to the record by moving to set aside the orders and may appeal from orders refusing to do so, not being entitled to appeal from the original orders.

4. Appeal and error ⟸151(1)—Persons who may move to vacate orders in proceedings to which they were not parties not entitled to relief on appeal unless aggrieved.

Persons entitled to lay the foundation for an appeal by motion to vacate orders made in proceedings to which they were not parties are not entitled to relief on appeal from orders refusing to vacate, unless aggrieved. Code Civ. Proc. § 938.

5. Appeal and error ⟸151(2)—Stockholders cannot appeal from order refusing to vacate order appointing receiver after due notice to corporation.

An order appointing a receiver for a corporation after due notice to it held binding on stockholders sued by the receiver under Civ. Code, § 309; the corporation being the aggrieved party, and hence the only one entitled to appeal from an order refusing to vacate such order.

6. Appeal and error ⟸151(2)—Debtors not parties to nor interested in controversy resulting in order appointing receiver for corporate creditor cannot appeal from order refusing to vacate such order.

An order appointing a receiver for a corporation held inoperative against debtors who were not parties to, nor interested in, the controversy or subject-matter thereof, so that, not being aggrieved by such action, they could not appeal from an order refusing to vacate the order.

7. Appeal and error ⟸151(2)—No appeal from orders merely permitting actions by receiver.

Persons against whom a receiver appointed for a corporation was authorized by orders, made after judgment against it, to institute actions for sums due it, held not aggrieved parties, and hence not entitled to appeal from orders refusing to vacate such orders, which were merely permissive and did not purport, by their own force, to work a deprivation of property or legal rights.

8. Appeal and error ⟸151(2)—Right invaded must be immediate to entitle party to appeal.

To render a party aggrieved by an order, so as to entitle him to appeal therefrom, the right invaded must be immediate, not merely some possible, remote consequence.

9. Receivers ⟸169—Defendants in receiver's action may interpose any defense against corporation.

A receiver being merely the minister of the corporation acting under the court's direction in attempting to enforce liabilities thereto, defendants in any action by him may interpose every defense they would have against the corporation.

10. Appeal and error ⊂874(3)—Validity of order appointing receiver not considered on appeal by parties he is authorized to sue from order refusing to vacate such order.

Whether an order appointing a receiver for a corporation is void on its face for want of jurisdiction, as not having been made in such a case as the statute specifies, or in a case where receivers are customarily appointed, need not be considered on appeal from an order refusing to vacate such order on motion by debtors against whom the receiver is authorized to bring suit; such objection being available in the receiver's action against them.

11. Appeal and error ⊂874(3)—Receiver's right to sue cannot be determined on appeal from orders appointing him and granting such authority.

A receiver's right to sue as such must be determined in such action itself and cannot be determined on appeal by parties he is authorized to sue from orders refusing to vacate orders appointing him and granting permission to bring such actions.

In Bank.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by John Luckenbach against John B. Laer and others. Judgment for plaintiff. From orders denying motions to vacate orders made after judgment, Chris Krempel and others appeal. Appeals dismissed.

See, also, 204 Pac. 591.

John T. Jones, Norman A. Bailie, and Henry J. Stevens, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Alfred McAdoo, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, J. Appellants are dissatisfied with certain orders, made after judgment denying their motions to vacate and set aside previous orders of the trial court, also made after judgment, appointing a receiver and advising him to institute certain actions against them, after the judgment was returned unsatisfied. The appellants are Chris Krempel, Anna Krempel, Lucy Hauerwaas, and William H. Preston, not one of whom was a party to the action.

The plaintiff, Luckenbach, instituted an action against the defendants Laer, Trueblood, and the Krempel-Preston Company, a corporation, to recover an ordinary money judgment upon certain promissory notes. Judgment was entered in his favor, which, with attorney's fees and costs, amounted to approximately $6,000. The judgment was returned unsatisfied. No statutory proceedings in aid of execution were had, but the plaintiff applied to the court, in this same action, for the appointment of a receiver of the defendant corporation, upon the ground that the corporation refused to apply its property in satisfaction of the judgment, and had suffered its right to do business to become suspended by reason of its failure to pay the license tax due the state. In support of the motion the plaintiff set forth in his affidavit that the corporation had a claim and demand against William H. Preston, one of the appellants here, in an amount in excess of $23,000, which was unpaid and owing, and that an agreement and understanding had been arrived at between Preston and the Krempel-Preston Company, by which the indebtedness was to be paid and discharged in such way as to prevent plaintiff from securing a satisfaction of his judgment. The motion was granted over the opposition of the defendant corporation, and Willard L. Goodwin was appointed receiver; the order of his appointment also advising him to institute an action against Preston. A further authorization of the court was granted the receiver to institute an action against Chris Krempel and Mrs. Lucy Hauerwaas, upon the allegation of the receiver that they, also, were indebted to the suspended corporation. Some time later the receiver applied for and was granted permission to institute an action against Preston, Krempel, Mrs. Hauerwaas, and Anna Krempel, upon the ground that, as directors of the Krempel-Preston Company, they had divided and paid out to themselves (other than to Anna Krempel), as stockholders, out of the capital stock of the corporation, more than $164,000, in violation of the provisions of section 309 of the Civil Code. No appeals were taken from the order appointing the receiver or from the various orders granting permission to institute suits.

Of the various actions sanctioned by the court, the only one actually commenced was the one to recover from appellants upon the joint and several liability imposed by section 309, supra. Aside from the filing of one answer and an amendment thereto, the record does not disclose what further proceedings were taken. The bill of exceptions discloses merely that the action is still pending.

Subsequently Preston, and later Krempel, Anna Krempel, and Lucy Hauerwaas, interposed motions, upon due notice, in the original action of Luckenbach v. Laer et al., the one in which these appeals are being prosecuted, to have vacated and set aside the order appointing Goodwin as receiver and permitting him to institute the various actions. The motions were denied, and it is from the action of the lower court refusing to vacate and set aside such orders that these appeals are prosecuted. By stipulation the appeals were ordered consolidated and will be disposed of in this one opinion. Pending such disposition this court, after due application, granted a writ of supersedeas staying all proceedings in the superior court in the action begun by the receiver against these appellants.

[1-3] The first question to be considered is the right of the appellants to an appeal from orders made in an action to which they were not parties. These appeals are not taken from the order appointing the receiver, or from the orders granting the receiver permission to institute the action against the appellants, but are from the orders refusing to vacate its prior action. Orders refusing to vacate cannot, under any circumstances, be made the subject of direct appeal, unless they themselves be of a class of orders designated by the Code as appealable. Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Calif., etc., Co., 159 Cal. 484, 487–489, 114 Pac. 838. The reason for the rule, succinctly stated in the case cited, is that—

"An order denying a motion to set aside a former order amounts to no more than a refusal by the court to reconsider an action already taken and the appeal should be taken from the original order."

But these orders were special orders made after final judgment (section 963, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc.), and are therefore appealable. The appellants were not parties to the proceedings resulting in the original orders, and for that reason could not appeal therefrom, which is a circumstance authorizing an appeal from an order refusing to vacate or set aside, in cases where an appeal is otherwise permissible. Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. Calif. Dev. Co., supra. For the purpose of an appeal they have followed the procedure allowed by our practice to one whose rights or interests are injuriously affected by any appealable order made in an action to which he is not a party, through the process of making themselves parties by moving to set those orders aside. Est. of McDermott, 127 Cal. 450, 452, 59 Pac. 783. Their motions being denied, they may, on this appeal, have the proceedings of which they complain reviewed. Elliott v. Superior Court, 144 Cal. 501, 509, 77 Pac. 1109, 103 Am. St. Rep. 102; Tattenham v. Superior Court, 155 Cal. 205, 206, 100 Pac. 248. Such proceeding can scarcely be said to make them parties to the action, but it does make them parties to the record, and as such entitled to appeal. 2 Cal. Juris. p. 209, § 52. Unless appellants were permitted to move in the court below to set aside the orders, they would be left without the remedy of an appeal. People v. Grant, 45 Cal. 97, 99; 2 Cal. Juris. p. 209, § 52. Whether there is merit in the appeal depends upon other considerations.

[4-6] Notwithstanding the right of persons who are neither parties to the proceeding nor to the record to move in the court below for the purpose of laying the foundation for an appeal, it does not necessarily follow that they will be entitled to any relief here. Only aggrieved parties may appeal. Section 938, Code Civ. Proc. The rights of appellants Chris Krempel and Lucy Hauerwaas as stockholders were fully cared for and protected in the proceedings which resulted in the appointment of the receiver. it was only after due notice to the Krempel-Preston Company of an actual controversy in open court that the receiver was appointed. The action of the lower court in that matter was therefore binding upon such appellants, as stockholders of the corporation. Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 592, 27 Pac. 674, 30 Pac. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158. The corporation was the aggrieved party in that matter and had the right of an appeal from the order. Winsor Pottery Works v. Superior Court, 13 Cal. App. 360, 363, 109 Pac. 843. So far as the record indicates, the appellants Anna Krempel and William H. F. Preston were not parties to nor interested in the controversy which resulted in the appointment of the receiver, and had no interest in the subject-matter of that proceeding. Consequently, that order was inoperative against them and they were not aggrieved by the court's action. Miller v. Bate, 56 Cal. 135, 136.

[7-9] Neither were any personal rights nor property interests of any of the appellants so affected by the action of the lower court in granting the receiver permission to institute actions against them as to render them aggrieved parties. Those orders which the appellants subsequently sought to have vacated and set aside were merely permissive in character. Nothing was attempted thereby to be taken away from the appellants, which feature distinguishes the situation here from the relation of the parties disclosed in those cases cited in support of appellants' contention. In each of the cases we have examined, the parties seeking relief were directly affected and aggrieved by the judgment or order complained of, in that such judgment or order, by its own force, purported to work a deprivation of property or legal rights. We find no cases holding that some remote consequence which may flow from an order will render a party aggrieved thereby. The right invaded must be immediate. Adams v. Woods, 8 Cal. 306, 315. The appellants were in exactly the same position after the appointment of the receiver and the granting of permission to sue as they were before. They were, or were not, liable to the Krempel-Preston C[illegible]pany and to its creditors, as the facts exist. The receiver is merely the minister of the corporation, acting under the direction of the court, in attempting to enforce such liability. In any action brought thereon by him, the appellants may interpose every defense they would have against the corporation. If they have a meritorious defense, they will, we may assume, defeat any recovery. Barth

v. Enger-Kress Co., 92 Wis. 225, 65 N. W. 1035.

[10] In answer to the contention that the order appointing the receiver is void on its face for want of jurisdiction, it not having been made in such cases as the statute expressly specifies, or in a case where receivers have heretofore been appointed by usages of courts of equity (Miller v. Oliver, 174 Cal. 407, 410, 163 Pac. 355), we need only say that if the point is well taken appellants may avail themselves of that objection in the action brought by the receiver against them.

[11] The question of the right of the receiver to maintain the action in the capacity in which he sues is a question that must be determined in such action itself. Preston (one of these appellants) v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County, 184 Cal. 658, 195 Pac. 916.

For the foregoing reasons, the appellants are not parties aggrieved, and the appeals are dismissed.

We concur: WILBUR, C. J.; LENNON, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; MYERS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LAWLOR, J.

---

190 Cal. 382

WRIGHT v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SONOMA COUNTY et al. (S. F. 10388.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1923.)

Pleading ⊜8(2)—Complaint held demurrable as stating conclusion of law.

Where plaintiff's complaint, in a proceeding against the board of supervisors to enjoin the sale of bonds of the city of Santa Rosa high school district, failed to allege that he is a taxpayer within the city of Santa Rosa high school district, but on the contrary affirmatively alleged that he is a resident and taxpayer in the Wright elementary common school district, and that said Wright district is no part of the high school district, the allegation that plaintiff's land is "subject to taxation to meet payment of the bonds hereinafter referred to in this complaint" was a mere conclusion of law.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Percy S. King, Judge.

Suit by Sampson B. Wright to enjoin the Board of Supervisors of Sonoma County and others from selling bonds. From an order sustaining a demurrer to his complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. A. Barham and H. W. A. Weske, both of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

G. W. Hoyle, of Santa Rosa, for respondents.

WILBUR, C. J. Plaintiff brought this action to restrain the board of supervisors from selling bonds of the city of Santa Rosa high school district, claiming that the election authorizing such bonds was illegally conducted, and that the bonds were therefore illegal and void. A demurrer was interposed to his complaint, alleging that the facts stated therein were insufficient to constitute a cause of action; that the plaintiff had not the legal capacity to sue; that the complaint is ambiguous and is also unintelligible because the boundaries of the district cannot be ascertained therefrom; that it does not appear that the plaintiff is a citizen of the United States, or that he is in any way interested in the subject of said action. The demurrer was sustained with leave to amend, but the plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment was rendered against him, from which he appeals.

It is only necessary to consider one proposition advanced by the respondents in support of the judgment of the trial court. It affirmatively appears from the complaint that the plaintiff is a resident and taxpayer in the Wright elementary common school district. This district and 24 other elementary common school districts are named in the notice of election attached to the complaint. In regard to said elementary school districts the plaintiff alleged:

"That said 25 elementary common school districts named in said exhibit do not now, and never did, constitute or form a part of the city of Santa Rosa high school district, nor did either of them."

It was further alleged:

"That the said trustees of said city of Santa Rosa high school district are not now, and never were at any time mentioned herein, trustees or representatives of any of the 25 elementary common school districts mentioned in Exhibit B, attached hereto, and that neither of said elementary school districts ever at the time mentioned herein became or formed any part or portion of said city of Santa Rosa high school district, and that said trustees never at any time had control of or jurisdiction over or any power or right to function for any of said elementary school districts."

It was thus apparent that plaintiff not only fails to allege that he is a taxpayer within the city of Santa Rosa high school district, but, on the contrary, affirmatively alleges that he is a resident and taxpayer in the Wright elementary common school district, and that said district is no part of the high school district. Under these circumstances the allegation that plaintiff's land is "subject to taxation to meet payment of the bonds hereinafter referred to in this complaint" is a mere conclusion of law.

The attention of the plaintiff was called to the insufficiency of his complaint by the general demurrer and by the specifications therein, and, notwithstanding that fact, he declined to amend. The demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

We concur: LENNON, J.; KERRIGAN, J.; WASTE, J.; LAWLOR, J.; SEAWELL, J.; MYERS, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 360

GAUSE v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO.
(Civ. 2515.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 4, 1923.)

1. Contracts ⟸186(3)—Sublessee not in privity as to contract for water between lessee and company.

In an action by a sublessee against a company for failure to deliver water to leased lands in accordance with a conditional contract between plaintiff's lessor and the company where complaint did not show privity of contract between plaintiff and the company, it was bad on demurrer.

2. Pleading ⟸49—Nature of action determined by allegations of complaint.

The nature of an action must be determined from the allegations of the complaint.

3. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1)—Allegation of breach of contract to deliver water held insufficient.

Where a contract to furnish water for irrigation purposes provided that defendant would furnish water if it had any left or was able to do so after using what was necessary for development of electric energy, a complaint for failure to deliver water in accordance with the contract that did not show that the water was not needed for the purpose stated was not good as against demurrer.

4. Pleading ⟸8(6), 214(5)—Allegation that defendant acted willfully and wrongfully held conclusion of law not admitted on demurrer.

In action by a sublessee for failure to deliver water to leased lands in accordance with a conditional contract, allegation, that defendant "willfully and wrongfully" and in violation of its contract between plaintiff's lessor and the company did not furnish water, involved a conclusion of law not admitted on demurrer.

5. Waters and water courses ⟸158(2)—Conditional contract to furnish water held not to vest water right.

Where a contract between an electric company and a landowner to furnish water for irrigation did not convey a water right, but was executory and provided for a conditional sale of a named amount of water, and the company's obligation thereunder could be modified or canceled by happening of named conditions, no water right was thereby vested in the landowner.

6. Waters and water courses ⟸158(2)—Conditional contract for water held not to create servitude on electric company's system.

In a contract between an electric company and a landowner to furnish a named amount of water for irrigation, where no land was described to which a right might attach and the owner could utilize the water on any lands then owned or which he might thereafter own or lease, the contract being for the owner's personal benefit with a provision against assignment without permission of the company, and there being no ditch or other fixed source mentioned in the contract to which any water right could attach as a servitude, the rights conferred were too indefinite to constitute a water right which could be held as a servitude on the company's water system.

7. Pleading ⟸312—Intention of parties revealed from contract and not from allegations of complaint.

In action by a sublessee for failure to deliver water to leased lands in accordance with a conditional contract between plaintiff's lessor and defendant, the intention of the parties must be revealed by the contract itself, rather than by allegations of the complaint.

8. Pleading ⟸192(2) — Complaint demurrable for uncertainty.

In action by a sublessee for failure to deliver water to the leased lands in accordance with a conditional contract between plaintiff's lessor and defendant which provided that defendant should sell and deliver a named amount of water to lessor for irrigating land owned or leased by him, where the complaint did not purport to be based on an assignment of any water right but on an indefinite portion of the water called for by the original contract, it was subject to special demurrer for uncertainty.

9. Assignments ⟸58—Partial assignment not enforced against debtor not consenting thereto.

A partial assignee has no legal standing to enforce a partial assignment against a debtor who has not consented thereto.

10. Assignments ⟸129—In equity partial assignee may bring all parties before court.

In equity a partial assignee has the right to bring all the parties before the court and have his rights under an assignment determined.

11. Assignments ⟸129—Assignor proper party in assignee's action on assigned contract.

In an action by a sublessee as assignee of rights for failure to deliver water to leased lands in accordance with a conditional contract between plaintiff's lessor and defendant, the failure of plaintiff to make his lessor, as assignor, a party defendant, furnished reason for sustaining demurrer for misjoinder of parties.

12. Estoppel ⟸107—Company not estopped from shutting off water.

In an action by sublessee for failure to deliver water to leased lands in accordance with a conditional contract between plaintiff's lessor and defendant, where plaintiff alleged that defendant was estopped from taking the position that he was not entitled to water under the contract and did not allege false statements or intention of defendant to deceive or mislead him or that plaintiff in taking a sublease or in planting his crop relied on statements of defendant, no cause of action was stated against defendant as of estoppel.

13. Waters and water courses ⇐154(1)—One cannot use water of another so as to make it appurtenant to land.

In view of Civ. Code, § 662, providing that a thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit, a person may not without right use on his land water belonging to another and by such use make it appurtenant to the land.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sutter County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by W. S. Gause against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Robert H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Thos. J. Straub and Wm. B. Bosley, both of San Francisco, and Richard Belcher, of Marysville, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. By his second amended complaint plaintiff sought to recover damages from defendant for the latter's alleged failure to deliver water for rice irrigation upon land which had been subleased by plaintiff from one Levisee. The complaint is in three counts, the last two incorporating by reference practically all the allegations of the first count. Indeed, the first count sets forth the basic facts of the obligation and breach of respondent, if any, and to this count extended consideration may be given. It pleads a certain written contract between said Levisee and respondent, a copy of which is attached to the complaint and made a part thereof. By the terms of said contract respondent on the conditions therein stated agreed to sell and deliver not to exceed 600 miner's inches of water to Levisee for irrigating land owned by or leased to him in the county of Sutter, and to deliver such water at a fixed point designated in said contract; said water "to be used only by the consumer upon his said lands for the purpose of raising rice and beans thereon." No lands were described in the contract further than the specification that the water was to be used on "seven hundred and fifty acres of land owned by or leased to the consumer (Levisee) in said county of Sutter." The source from which said water was to be furnished was not mentioned, and the contract was made unassignable by Levisee except by the written consent of respondent. It also appears that the water "to be furnished hereunder will first be utilized by the company for the generation of electric energy, which is the primary use to which the same will be put. Therefore anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding, it is agreed by and between the parties hereto that the company shall have the right, without incurring any liability to the consumer by reason thereof, to discontinue delivering water hereunder whenever in the opinion of its engineer in charge such discontinuance is necessary in order to conserve the company's stored waters required for the generation of electric energy." The contract further provided that respondent was to commence the delivery of the water at the beginning of the irrigating season of 1919 at which time Levisee was to pay one-half of the sum due under the agreement and respondent reserved the right to cancel the contract or to discontinue the delivery of the water upon default of the consumer in making his payments as required.

After pleading said contract of January 20, 1919, the complaint alleged that on February 21, 1919, and April 3, 1919, Levisee leased two certain tracts of land from the owners thereof, and that on or about March 20, 1919. "Levisee sublet all of the above described parcels of land to plaintiff * * * for the crop season of 1919, * * * for the planting and growing of rice, which facts the defendant well knew." This is followed by an allegation that plaintiff entered into possession of said land and prepared it for the cultivation of rice and thereafter sowed rice thereon and—

"VIII. That it was upon the direct assurance of defendant that water would be supplied pursuant to said contract to said land that said C. W. Levisee entered into said leases herein referred to. That said water right was acquired for use upon said land and was necessary for its beneficial enjoyment and said land could not be so advantageously used without it. Said water right was an adjunct to said land and was used with it for its benefit up to the time when defendant ceased delivering water to said land as herein alleged."

As to this allegation it may be observed in passing that no "assurance" is claimed to have been made by defendant to plaintiff, but only to Levisee, and it was simply to the effect that the water would be supplied "pursuant to said contract"; and, furthermore, the allegation that "said water right was an adjunct to said land" is obviously a mere conclusion, and was so regarded by the trial court. It is further alleged that at the proper time respondent began delivering the water and plaintiff applied it to the irrigation of said rice, and as a result thereof the rice crop was in a healthy and flourishing condition. "That no water was supplied to said lands prior to the time that this plaintiff took possession, and planted the same to rice, and that at no time was any water supplied under said contracts to any other person than this plaintiff."

It further appears that at the time of the execution of said contract between respondent and Levisee, the former "was advised and well knew" that the latter's purpose was to sublease said premises and to install an irrigation system for the distribution of the water to be furnished by respondent and that said water was to be used upon the lands subleased to plaintiff, and it was upon the direct assurance of respondent that the water would be furnished according to the contract and in an amount adequate to irrigate said lands that said plaintiff and Levisee entered into said agreement of March 20, 1919, and it was upon the full belief and faith on the part of the parties to said agreement or lease that said lands would receive an adequate supply of water that said agreement of March 20, 1919, was executed and the land planted to rice and "the parties to said contract treated and regarded" said water as being made "a part or appurtenant to said lands during said term and for said purposes aforesaid."

It is further alleged that plaintiff had no other means of irrigating said land, and that without a continuous supply of water sufficient to flood all of said lands from January 1st to November 1st to a depth of several inches it would be impossible to grow and mature a rice crop on said lands or any part thereof, which was well known to defendant; that respondent "without any notice to said plaintiff on or about the 9th day of July, 1919, willfully and wrongfully and in violation of the terms and provisions of its said contract aforesaid, shut off all water from said lands, turned and diverted its water supply in other directions and completely deprived said plaintiff and all of said lands from any further water for irrigation thereof."

Then follow allegations that said lands were referred to and contemplated by said contract, that Levisee duly performed all covenants and conditions imposed upon him by said contract, including the payment of all moneys required of him, and that, as a consequence of "said defendant ceasing to furnish water, the said rice crop growing on said premises became a total loss, all to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $165,025."

The second count adopts the foregoing allegations and makes the additional specific charge:

"That on or about the 20th day of March, 1919, said C. W. Levisee assigned to plaintiff such portions of the water as called for in and by virtue of said contract entered into between the defendant and C. W. Levisee as was necessary to irrigate said lands for the purpose of growing rice thereon."

The third count attempts to set forth an estoppel in the following language:

"That as herein alleged, said defendant well knew that said plaintiff could not raise rice on said lands without the application of said water as contracted for as herein stated. That knowing that said plaintiff had planted said lands to rice, furnished the said plaintiff with the necessary amount of water for the purpose of growing said rice. That at no time did said defendant object to or refuse to give plaintiff the necessary amount of water for raising said rice under and pursuant to said contracts made and entered into by and between said C. W. Levisee and said defendant.

"That said plaintiff continued on with the cultivation of said rice during all of said times and that said defendant well knew said facts and raised no objection thereto.

"That said defendant is now estopped from taking the position that said plaintiff was not entitled to water under and by virtue of said contracts by reason of the facts as herein alleged."

To said second amended complaint and to each count thereof the defendant demurred upon the general ground, for a defect of parties in that said Levisee was not joined either as plaintiff or defendant, and separately that each count was uncertain, ambiguous, and unintelligible for various reasons that were carefully enumerated. The trial court sustained the demurrer in the following order:

"The court being fully advised in the premises hereby orders that the demurrer to said second amended complaint, and to each alleged cause of action therein contained, be, and the same is hereby sustained without leave to amend."

From the judgment entered thereupon in favor of defendant the appeal has been taken.

As to all these counts, it will not be disputed that no cause of action is stated against defendant unless it appears that some legal obligation was imposed upon said defendant in favor of plaintiff and that said obligation has been violated to the injury of the latter.

[1] According to the first count, whatever obligation existed is based upon and is created by the covenants and promises contained in said contract between respondent and said Levisee. No other duty than that arising from said contract is disclosed or even hinted at, and it must be conceded that to the terms of that contract and to them alone we must look for the character and measure of that obligation. When we do that, the result is not involved in any doubt or obscurity whatever. The obligation undertaken by respondent was to furnish water under certain conditions to said Levisee. Plaintiff was not a party to said contract and was not referred to in any manner. There is some pretense that the parties to said agreement had in view other persons and contemplated the irrigation of certain lands, but no attempt has been made to reform said contract, nor has any mistake or fraud been alleged or claimed. We must be guided, therefore, by the intention of the parties as expressed in said written instrument and conclude that said obligation was created in favor of Levisee and him alone, or one in privity with said contract. There is no claim, however, of privity. Indeed, appellant in his closing brief declares that "this action is predicated upon a tort and not a contract," and that "if this action was in any wise dependent upon a privity of contract we would not now be here." Furthermore, referring to said contract between Levisee and respondent, appellant says that he "is not a party to that contract and his rights are in no wise predicated thereon." If appellant is to be taken at his word, it is plain that at least his first count reveals no cause of action for the reason that Levisee is the only person who could demand the performance of any duty under said contract, and also that no obligation from respondent to any one is revealed except by virtue of said contract.

In view of this claim and admission of appellant it is not necessary to consider any further the proposition that the duty and obligation arising out of a contract are due only to those with whom or for whom it is made, and that the application of this rule makes it plain that the covenants of respondent were in favor of Levisee and not of plaintiff. We may add, however, that this same contract was under investigation in the case of Diggs v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (Cal. App.) 206 Pac. 765, and this question was considered and many authorities cited which illustrate the application of the principle.

In this connection we may emphasize the evident fact that the only pretense of a cause of action in the first count is based upon said contract between Levisee and respondent. Strike out the allegations in reference to said contract and it is manifest that there would be left no foundation for the claim of any liability on the part of respondent for the damage suffered by appellant. Certain legal conclusions, implying wrongdoing on its part, would remain; but no fact would appear to justify such conclusion. It matters not whether the action be regarded as on contract or in tort, since the only basis for any obligation of respondent is found in said contract, and we have seen, this did not create a duty in favor of appellant. But, as pointed out by respondent, the first count contains all the characteristic features of an action on contract. It pleads said agreement between Levisee and respondent and attempts to establish appellant's privity therein. This is followed by the only allegation which purports to disclose any act or omission tending to charge respondent with liability for appellant's damages, as follows:

"That said defendant without any notice to said plaintiff, on or about the 9th day of July, 1919, willfully and wrongfully and in violation of the terms and provisions of its said contract, aforesaid, shut off all water from said lands."

[2] Of course, the nature of the action must be determined from the allegations of the complaint (Busch v. Interborough, etc., Co., 187 N. Y. 388, 80 N. E. 197, 10 Ann. Cas. 460), and the allegations herein leave no uncertainty as to the proper interpretation of the cause of action.

[3, 4] Another reason for holding the first count fatally defective is that the allegation of the breach of the water contract is insufficient. It is apparent that therein respondent agreed to furnish water upon certain conditions. It was expressly stipulated that it should first be used for the generation of electric energy which was declared to be its primary purpose. In fact, the fair interpretation of the covenants of the parties is that the company would furnish Levisee with water, if it had any left or was able to do so after using what was necessary for the development of the requisite electric energy. That circumstance or contingency therefore became an inseparable part of the promise, and in order to state a cause of action it would be necessary to show that such water was not needed for that purpose. In view of the absence of any allegation to that effect it will be presumed that respondent discontinued the delivery of the water for the reason that, in the opinion of its engineer, it was necessary to conserve it for the development of electric power. Manifestly, the words "willfully and wrongfully and in violation of the terms and provisions of its said contract as aforesaid" must be disregarded as stating a mere conclusion (Diggs v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., supra), and in view of the conditional promise, the mere failure to deliver the water cannot be deemed a breach of the contract.

In Fisher v. Pearson, 48 Cal. 473, the defendant agreed to pay all bills against a certain house or litigate the same before paying them if he deemed them unjust, and it was held to be insufficient to allege that he had failed to pay said bills and, furthermore, that having agreed to pay all bills for which the plaintiff had not made himself liable, it was necessary in order to state a cause of action against him to recover such bills to allege that plaintiff had not made himself personally liable therefor.

In Salisbury v. Shirley, 53 Cal. 461, the lease in question provided, in effect, that during the last six months of the term the lessee would pay the monthly rent and all taxes, rates, and assessments which, during the six months, should be levied or assessed upon the demised premises, provided the net income from the property should be sufficient for said purposes, and it was held that in suing to recover the taxes levied during that period, it was incumbent upon the plaintiff to show in the complaint a breach of the covenant by an averment that the net income from the property during the six months was sufficient to pay the rent, taxes and assessments.

In Van Buskirk v. Kuhns, 164 Cal. 472, 129 Pac. 587, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 710, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 932, the defendant had agreed to pay a certain sum "when able" and plaintiff did not allege ability to pay. In holding the complaint insufficient the court said:

"If the promise is conditional upon such ability, it is, as is said in Rodgers v. Byers, 127 Cal. 528 (60 Pac. 42), incumbent upon the plaintiff to allege and prove that the condition has been complied with. This is not, like the plea of the statute of limitations, matter of defense. It is a substantive part of the cause of action, and the burden of proof with respect to it, is upon the plaintiff."

The situation herein is similar, and for that reason the allegation of breach is insufficient.

[5] The foregoing would seem to be a sufficient answer to the suggestion that a water right was created by said contract and that it became appurtenant to the land subleased by appellant. There was no conveyance of a water right, but the contract was executory and provided for the sale of so much water under conditions therein enumerated. It was not a sale but an agreement to sell, and respondent's obligation thereunder could be modified, suspended, or fully canceled by the happening of the conditions mentioned in said contract. The situation was therefore entirely inconsistent with the view that a water right was thereby vested in Levisee. The principle is the same as though there had been an agreement to sell in the future upon certain conditions any other kind of property. Respondent engaged, "for a price, to transfer to another (Levisee) the title to a certain thing" (water), (section 1727, Civ. Code), but did not actually transfer the title as contemplated by a sale (section 1721, Civ. Code).

[6, 7] Furthermore, the terms of said contract are inconsistent with the theory that any supposed water right was intended to be appurtenant to any land. In the first place no land was described to which such right might attach, and the water could be utilized by Levisee on any lands that he might then own or lease or might thereafter own or lease in Sutter county. The contract was also for the personal benefit of Levisee with a provision against assignment without the written permission of respondent. If it was intended to make a water right appurtenant to any tract of land, there would be manifestly no reason in putting in this reservation. There was also no ditch or other fixed source mentioned in the contract to which any water right could attach as a servitude. The rights conferred upon Levisee were also too uncertain and indefinite to constitute a water right which could be held as a servitude on respondent's water system. These and other considerations are related by respondent as indicative of the purpose of the parties not to create an appurtenance to any land, and as we must be controlled by the intention of the parties as revealed by the contract itself rather than by the allegations of the complaint as to what the parties intended (Barney v. Indiana R. Co., 157 Ind. 228, 61 N. E. 194), we conclude that said suggested theory is entirely untenable.

Attention is directed to the decision of the Supreme Court in Copeland v. Fairview Land, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 148, 131 Pac. 119, wherein plaintiff, as successor of the Fairview Company, claimed a water right as against the Hemet Company through a contract made between said companies, wherein the former agreed to furnish the latter "water * * * upon the same terms and price it furnishes water to other persons * * * and will deliver such water into the pipes of said parties of the second part on their said lands at such points on the line of its pipe or pipes to which said parties of the second part may lay their pipes." The Supreme Court said:

"This clause does not operate to transfer to the Fairview Company any property right or interest in the supply of the Hemet Company. At most, it is a mere executory agreement for sales of water, to be effective at the option of the Fairview Company. As an agreement to sell an interest in property, it lacks the essential element of certainty as to the property which is to be delivered. It does not state the quantity of water to be furnished, nor give any means of determining that quantity. The precise act to be done in its performance is not clearly ascertainable. It is therefore incapable of enforcement against any specific property."

The contract herein is equally executory, as we have seen, and equally indefinite as to the amount of water to be delivered, since it depended upon the need of respondent for development of electric power. We deem it incredible that such contract can operate to vest a water right or create an appurtenance to land.

But if by any rule of construction such effect could be given to it, then the interest was to continue only so long as respondent did not need the water for its own use and it was subject to termination when the supply became insufficient. We must assume, as before stated, in the absence of an allegation to the contrary, that respondent exercised the privilege reserved in said contract. Of course, plaintiff cannot claim that any water right was actually appurtenant to the land at the time he subleased it, since he alleges that the water had not then been supplied to said land; it being plain that water must be actually used by right with the land for its benefit to constitute an appurtenance. Section 662, Civ. Code. His claim must be that it became appurtenant thereafter by its use, basing his right upon said contract between Levisee and respondent, but this view we think cannot be maintained. Moreover, if any water right by virtue of said contract could and did become appurtenant to said land after the execution of said sublease, there is nothing in the complaint to show that it was transferred to plaintiff and we must assume that it remained vested in Levisee, with whom the contract was executed.

We may add that in our opinion some of the grounds of the special demurrer to this count were well taken, but we deem it unnecessary to consider them specifically.

[8] The second count is based upon an alleged assignment, but it is to be observed that it does not purport to be an assignment of any water right but of an indefinite portion of the water called for by the original contract. The allegation can amount to nothing more than that there was a subcontract between plaintiff and Levisee whereby the latter agreed to furnish the former with water which he should receive from respondent. It is at least doubtful whether this allegation would show any privity between plaintiff and respondent under said contract. 5 Corpus Juris, § 6, p. 841; 3 Page on Contracts, p. 1933. At any rate, the allegation is so uncertain as to be subject to the special demurrer on that ground. Berg v. Yakima Co., 83 Wash. 451, 145 Pac. 619, L. R. A. 1915D, 292, 297.

[9-11] Moreover, the allegation is, at best, only of a partial assignment, and the rule at law is that "a partial assignee has no legal standing to enforce a partial assignment against a debtor who has not consented thereto." 3 Cal. Jurisprudence, p. 273; Clancy v. Plover, 107 Cal. 272, 40 Pac. 394; Buckeye Refining Co. v. Kelly, 163 Cal. 8, 124 Pac. 536, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 840. In equity, though, the partial assignee has the right to bring all the parties before the court and have his rights under the assignment determined. Goldman v. Murray, 164 Cal. 419, 129 Pac. 462. If we apply the rule in equity, it would seem that the plaintiff should have made Levisee a party defendant, and his failure to do so furnished a reason for sustaining the demurrer for misjoinder of parties.

Other grounds of special demurrer were enumerated, but we pass them by, as we hold the foregoing sufficient to justify the court's action; besides, the general demurrer was good for the reason that, as in the first count, there was no sufficient allegation of the breach by respondent of its conditional promise to furnish water.

[12] As to the third count, based upon the theory of estoppel, the pleading is also fatally defective. The general elements of equitable estoppel have been often considered by the authorities, and it would seem hardly necessary to notice them in detail. We may refer, though, to the following citations of respondent: Section 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure; Boggs v. Merced, etc., Co., 14 Cal. 279; Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 38, 85 Am. Dec. 157; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 4 Pac. 919, 10 Pac. 674; Griffeth v. Brown, 76 Cal. 260, 18 Pac. 372; Watson v. Sutro, 86 Cal. 500, 24 Pac. 172, 25 Pac. 64; Newhall v. Hatch, 134 Cal. 269, 66 Pac. 266, 55 L. R. A. 673; Nilson v. Sarment, 153 Cal. 524, 96 Pac. 315, 126 Am. St. Rep. 91; Bids v. Reed, 169 Cal. 33, 145 Pac. 516; Treat v. Treat, 170 Cal. 329, 150 Pac. 53, 57; Staniford v. Trombly, 181 Cal. 372, 186 Pac. 599; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. (3d Ed.) § 805. As indicated by respondent, to constitute an estoppel within the well established meaning of that term, respondent must have made some statement to plaintiff respecting the water in question or done something implying a statement, which was untrue, intending plaintiff to act thereon to his damage. 1 Wiel, Water Rights (3d Ed.) § 593; Bigelow Estoppel (6th Ed.) p. 774; Diggs v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co., supra. Nothing of the kind appears in the complaint. No false statement nor statement of any kind by respondent, no concealment or conduct amounting to false statement or concealment appears. There is no allegation of any intention upon the part of respondent to deceive or mislead appellant, or that the latter in taking a sublease, or in planting his crop of rice relied upon any statement or conduct of respondent. In brief, no showing of deceit or any element of fraud, actual or constructive, is disclosed, and manifestly the doctrine of estoppel cannot be grounded upon the single fact that respondent had knowledge of the use of the water by appellant and made no objection to it. Appellant would naturally suppose that the use was in accordance with and with knowledge of the terms of said contract with Levisee. Indeed, it is alleged to have been in accordance with said contract. It would be a singular doctrine that one could not insist upon his rights under a contract because of his knowledge that another was seeking to appropriate benefits which he claimed thereunder.

The third count can have no greater force than if it alleged specifically that defendant had knowledge that plaintiff was using the water and claiming the right to use it as against respondent under the terms of said original contract. Respondent is not responsible if appellant misconceived its effect and there is nothing to show that it has not the legal right to insist upon its provisions.

Instances, no doubt, occur wherein the use of property belonging to another with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner gives rise to the principle of estoppel; but it can have no application to a case like this, where the use is claimed to be in accordance with and in reliance upon the terms of a definite contract.

The cases cited by appellant in this connection involve a different situation and were no doubt correctly decided. For instance, in Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 Pac. 88, 134 Am. St. Rep. 154, it was held inequitable to permit defendants to rely upon the statute of frauds, since by their conduct they had induced plaintiff to believe, and to act upon the belief, that they would enter into a written contract of employment. The gist of the decision as to estoppel is stated in the syllabus as follows:

"Where the defendants verbally promised the plaintiff, who was at the time occupying practically a life position in a police department, that if he would surrender his position and enter their employ they would engage him for a period of ten years at a stated salary, and would give him a written contract embodying the terms of his employment at a stated future time, and the plaintiff, in full reliance on such promise, irrevocably surrendered his position and entered the defendants' employ, such promise, in the eye of equity, constituted a binding contract, the subsequent repudiation of which by the defendants would constitute such a manifest fraud as would estop the defendants from asserting the invalidity of the oral contract."

It was declared that the conduct of defendants involved "fraud and falsehood" and therefore could not be tolerated by a court of equity.

Other objections were raised by the demurrer; for instance, that the allegation that respondent supplied water to the subleased lands in accordance with the contract between Levisee and respondent is inconsistent with its provision specifying that the water was to be delivered to a point in Auburn Ravine (which was not upon the land subleased to plaintiff), thence to be conveyed by Levisee in his own aqueducts to the points where he desired to use it, and that said count negatives the claim that plaintiff was injured by any act of respondent inasmuch as it alleges that at no time did respondent refuse to give appellant the necessary amount of water for raising rice under and pursuant to said contract. There is merit in these and other objections made by respondent; but, as this count is manifestly based upon an inadequate and invalid claim of estoppel, the other considerations become unimportant.

[13] Finally, appellant is mistaken in his claim that, under said section 662 of the Civil Code, the mere use of water with land for its benefit makes the water appurtenant to said land. The section provides that "a thing is deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit," etc. It would be subversive of the constitutional privilege of property ownership to hold that a person may without right use upon his land water belonging to another and by such use make it appurtenant to his land. Manifestly, the use must coexist with the ownership of the water right to make it appurtenant to his land. There is nothing in the complaint to show that plaintiff owned any water right which he could assert against respondent, and the use therefore of said water could not and did not constitute it an appurtenance to his land.

We feel satisfied that appellant has not shown by his complaint any violation of duty owed by him to respondent, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; HART, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 327

RANSOME-CRUMMEY CO. v. THURBER et al. (Civ. 4356.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2. California. Dec. 29, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 26, 1923.)

1. Municipal corporations ⟸569 — Findings held sufficient to sustain judgment for defendant in action to foreclose improvement lien.

A finding in certain consistent and uncontradictory language that a purported assessment for public improvements was made, that it was made against particular property, that the owner appealed, and his appeal was sustained and the assessment ordered corrected, but that it had not been corrected, held sufficient to support judgment for defendant in an action to foreclose an assessment lien.

2. Municipal corporations ⟸493(1)—Common council has jurisdiction to determine whether diagram on which assessment was made is correct.

Under the Vrooman Act, § 11, the common council has jurisdiction to determine whether or not a diagram on which an assessment for public improvements was based was correct.

3. Municipal corporations ⟸493(6)—Presumed that common council did not perform idle act, and that proceedings were fair and regular.

It is presumed that the common council did not perform an idle act, and that, in sustaining an appeal from an improvement assessment, the proceedings had and done were fair and regular.

4. Municipal corporations ⟸493(1)—Question of title properly decided by common council when before it as relating to improvement assessment.

Though the question of title is ordinarily a judicial question for the courts, nevertheless, when the question comes before the common council as relating to the ownership of property liable for an improvement assessment, such tribunal is not ipso facto divested of its jurisdiction, but may properly proceed to determine the question.

5. Municipal corporations ⟸493(2)—Appeals to common council from improvement assessment based on same notice of appeal not controlled by each other.

Where two persons have joined in a notice of appeal to the common council from an improvement assessment, a denial of the appeal of one will not retract and defeat the appeal of another previously sustained, nor would a denial of an appeal first heard prevent proceeding and hearing on the other.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Action by the Ransome-Crummey Company against Helen M. Thurber and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. F. Soto, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ralph C. McComish, of San Jose, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendants to foreclose a street assessment lien. The defendant had judgment, and the plaintiff has appealed, bringing up the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

In the year 1912 the proceeding was commenced for the improvement of the intersection of Fourteenth street (now Seventeenth street) and Santa Clara street in the city of San Jose. Thereafter such proceedings were had that a purported assessment was made and filed, and Agnes Beggs, on November 18, 1912, appealed to the common council of the city of San Jose. In her notice of appeal she set forth many grounds, and, among others, that the cost and charges for said improvement were illegally and improperly and not proportionately divided among the lots of land liable for the assessment, and that said assessment includes lots of land not legally liable for said assessment. Thereafter, on the 21st day of November, 1912, F. A. Curtis also appealed to the common council, and in his notice of appeal contended that in the assessment his property was included in lot No. 14, together with other property which he did not own, but that a bill for the total charge had been presented to him. And in his notice of appeal he also joined in the appeal of Agnes Beggs. Thereafter, the appeals coming on regularly for hearing, the appeal of F. A. Curtis was sustained, and the superintendent of streets was directed to correct the assessment, and in levying the same to treat San Fernando street as a main or intersecting street, joining a block on the east side of Fourteenth street. Thereafter the appeal of Agnes Beggs was denied.

The plaintiff in its amended complaint pleads a cause of action to foreclose the assessment lien levied against the property owned by the defendant Helen M. Thurber. The complaint is full, complete, and regular in every respect so far as any objection to it has been called to our attention. In her answer thereto the defendant put in issue the allegations of plaintiff's complaint, and then pleaded the order of the common council sustaining the appeal of F. A. Curtis, and directing the assessment to be corrected, and that the assessment had never been corrected, but remained as it was before said appeal. On the trial of the case the plaintiff introduced evidence which constituted a prima facie case. Thereupon the defendant introduced proof of the proceedings and order made on the appeal of F. A. Curtis.

[1] In preparing its findings the trial court did not make specific findings on the paragraph of the amended complaint pleading the regularity of the assessment. The appellant now contends that the finding as made is uncertain, inconsistent, and contradictory, and does not support the judgment for the defendants. The ultimate material fact involved was whether or not there was in force and effect an assessment against the property of the defendant. The findings are certain, consistent, and not contradictory in any respect in holding that a purported assessment was made; that it was made on the property of F. A. Curtis, among others; that he appealed; that his appeal was sustained and the assessment was ordered corrected; but that the assessment had not been corrected. We think a mere reading of the finding shows the attack is without merit.

The parties do not question the rule that an appeal by one owner suspends proceedings until that assessment appealed from is sustained, or another, in its place, is sustained. Williams v. Bergin, 108 Cal. 166, 172–173, 41 Pac. 287. The importance in this case, therefore, of Curtis' appeal, is apparent.

[2, 3] The appellant assumes that the order of the common council sustaining the appeal of Curtis attempted to determine that a street exists where the evidence shows it never existed, and that the determination by the common council was a nullity. The first answer to that contention is that it assumes the record shows facts which are not contained in the record. In the second place, the most that can be said is that the order of the common council was to the effect that the diagram on which the assessment was made was an incorrect diagram. Whether it was correct or incorrect was a question of fact which the common council had jurisdiction to hear and determine. Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 156) § 11. The record does not show that the assessment of the lot owned by Curtis was void, nor that such invalidity appeared on its face, nor did these matters appear on the face of the record of the common council. We must presume that the common council did not perform an idle act, and that, in sustaining the appeal of Curtis, all proceedings before the common council were had, done, and taken in a fair and regular manner.

[4] As to whether Curtis owned all of lot 14, as that expression was used on the face of the assessment was a question of fact coming regularly before the common council, and which the statute commanded the common council to hear and determine. Although the question of title is ordinarily a judicial question for the courts, nevertheless when the question comes before a tribunal which is duly and regularly proceeding to exercise its jurisdiction, such tribunal is not ipso facto divested of its jurisdiction, but may proceed to determine the question before it. That is all that was done in the instant case. If the superintendent of streets, in making up his assessment, had any doubt as to the ownership of any lot, the statute authorized him to write on the assessment "Unknown," but it also commanded him to write thereon the pro rata part of the assessment. If both of these things had been done the question of title would not have arisen.

[5] The appellant contends that, because the appeal of Agnes Beggs was denied, such denial carried with it the appeal of F. A. Curtis, and that the common council should have entered an order merely dismissing his appeal. We think this contention cannot be sustained for several reasons. F. A. Curtis had the right to adopt the notice of appeal of Agnes Beggs. The board ruled thereon, sustaining the appeal. The rights of the appellant became fixed by virtue of that ruling. Thereafter the board denied the appeal of Agnes Beggs, but such denial did not have the retroactive effect of undermining the appeal of F. A. Curtis which had already been disposed of.

Assuming, as appellant contends, that the first act on the part of the board was to deny the appeal of Agnes Beggs, then such denial it may be conceded terminated her rights growing out of her appeal, but it did not annihilate the paper known as her notice of appeal. The paper continued in existence for the purpose of the appeal of F. A. Curtis, and there was no irregularity on the part of the common council in proceeding to hear and determine his appeal.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 293

PACIFIC SLOPE SECURITIES CO. v. LLOYD. (Civ. 4353.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 28, 1922.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸1011(1) — Appellate court cannot disturb lower court's finding on conflicting evidence.

The appellate court is not at liberty to disturb a finding of the trial court upon conflicting evidence.

2. Corporations ⟸314(2) — Corporation held entitled to recover from manager secret profits received from another employed to buy stock of a competitor.

Where one while acting as manager of a corporation receives secret profits from one employed to buy the stock of a competitor, and concealed the fact from it and the stockholders, the corporation is entitled to recover the same from him.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by the Pacific Slope Securities Company against Fred B. Lloyd. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. B. Weiler, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Cooley & Crowley and A. E. Cooley, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant to recover a judgment for moneys had and received, the trial court entered a judgment in its favor, and the defendant has appealed and has brought up the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

The pleadings contained numerous irrelevant matters, the findings are subject to the same criticism, and much irrelevant and immaterial testimony was received. We shall touch on only those matters that seem to us to be material.

[1] For a time prior to the month of December, 1909, the Pacific Slope Securities Company and the Pacific Surety Company were competitors doing business in the state of California. In the early part of December a campaign was launched looking toward the purchase of the stock of the Pacific Surety Company by its rival, the plaintiff in this case. By pledging its own properties, and by others pledging their properties, $475,000 was borrowed and placed on deposit in the Western National Bank of San Francisco. On the 13th day of December, 1909, the Board of Directors of the plaintiff corporation passed a resolution as follows:

"Resolved, that the Western National Bank of San Francisco be, and it is hereby instructed to disburse all moneys borrowed by this corporation and through the notes of others for the use of this corporation, directly or indirectly, for the purpose of bringing about the purchase of shares of stock in the Pacific Surety Company, on the order of William V. Lloyd, he being hereby appointed agent and trustee for this corporation in said transaction with full authority and power."

The way that William V. Lloyd came to be named in the resolution is best stated in the language of the witness:

"I am the brother of the defendant, Fred B. Lloyd. I did not, on or about December 13, 1909, have any connection with the Pacific Slope Securities Company, and never to my knowledge acted for that company on any behalf whatever. The way I came to be named in the resolution was that Fred B. Lloyd asked me to act as a trustee in protection of his interest. He told me also that some resolutions had been passed, or something whereby the Western Metropolis Bank required my signature; that the affair had been withdrawn, but that the bank required my signature anyway, and that I should go over and sign a paper with Mr. Childers. I did go to the bank. Mr. Childers signed a paper, and then pointed out where I was to sign, and I signed. That was the extent of my connection with the matter. I do not know what the paper was. I had never been advised of any purchase of stock of Pacific Surety Company, and I had no connection with it. I knew nothing about any resolutions. I had never been told or requested to disburse moneys on account of Pacific Slope Securities Company and never received any of the money or knew of the disbursement. The only thing I ever did or knew about was the signing of my name."

E. N. Childers, the person mentioned by William V. Lloyd, was the president, and F. C. Ballentine was the secretary of the plaintiff corporation. By other resolutions E. N. Childers as president, and F. C. Ballentine as secretary, were authorized to contract for the purchase of the stock of the Pacific Surety Company to an extent not less than one-half thereof on such terms as they might deem advisable. On the same day the Pacific Slope Securities Company, through its president and secretary, in writing, contracted to purchase from O. L. Van Laningham stock of the Pacific Surety Company at $190 per share, and to pay Van Laningham $36,000 commission. Thereupon Van Laningham proceeded to obtain options to purchase the stock; to cause the options to be sent to the Western National Bank for the purpose of being taken up; to cause the purchasers to duly examine the options, the amounts, etc.; and generally to get the block of stock, so accumulated, ready for sale and delivery. In making his purchases from the stockholders he paid $150 per share. After a sufficient amount of stock had been conditionally purchased, the options were taken up and paid for at the rate of $150 per share. After the options had been so taken up, and after Van Laningham's commission of $36,000 had been paid, there was remaining on deposit in the bank $100,000, which sum was made up by the difference between $150 and $190 on each share of the stock so transferred. Out of the said deposit in the bank, $36,000 was set aside to cover a claim in favor of A. P. Redding. That item is not in controversy. The remaining sum of $64,000 was drawn out of the bank on checks presented by the defendant Fred B. Lloyd and O. L. Van Laningham. Those two men appeared at the bank window together. After they had drawn that sum of money, O. L. Van Laningham testified that he turned over to the defendant $37,250. The defendant denied that fact. The conflict in the testimony was for the trial court, and this court is not at liberty to disturb that finding. The conflict just noticed is the only conflict in the story related above. The record does not show the checks nor the form of the check on which the Western National Bank disbursed; however, the resolution, authorizing that bank to disburse the same on the order of William V. Lloyd, was in regular form, and it must be presumed at this time that the bank regularly and duly followed the directions contained in the resolution placed before it.

When the $64,000 was collected, as above recited, Van Laningham could have retained the whole because he was within the clear terms of his contract, but the question remains as to the rights of the defendant to receive from Van Laningham and retain for his own use any part of the $64,000.

When William V. Lloyd was appointed trustee for the plaintiff, he was at liberty to accept or reject the appointment. If he accepted the same he accepted the appointment with all of the duties arising out of such appointment. He had no legal right to assume the duties of such trusteeship for the plaintiff and at the time of entering upon the discharge of his duties to assume the obligation "in protection of his (Fred B. Lloyd's) interest" unbeknown to the plaintiff. When William V. Lloyd was appointed trustee there is some testimony in the record to the effect that Fred B. Lloyd was the manager of the plaintiff corporation. He so stated at Los Angeles to its secretary, F. C. Ballentine, and immediately before December 13, 1909. True it is that the defendant gave testimony to the effect that he was not an officer of the plaintiff corporation until December 29, 1909, but the conflict in the testimony was determined by the trial court against the defendant. There is no claim on the part of the defendant that the plaintiff or any of its officers knew that the defendant was to receive or did receive any moneys from Van Laningham. On the other hand, as we have stated, the defendant at the trial denied that he did receive any of such moneys.

[2] In view of what has been said, it does not appear that the trial court erred in rendering the judgment which it rendered. The case is ruled in all particulars by the case entitled Western States Life Ins. Co. v. Lockwood, 166 Cal. 185, 135 Pac. 496. While acting as manager of the plaintiff corporation the defendant received from Van Laningham secret profits, and concealed from the plaintiff and its stockholders the fact that he had received such moneys. The corporation was clearly entitled to recover the same.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 412

PEOPLE v. FARRELL et al. (Cr. 657.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 11, 1923.)

1. Larceny ⟸65—Evidence held to support conviction of grand larceny.

In a prosecution for stealing a box of carpenter tools, evidence held sufficient to support conviction of grand larceny.

2. Criminal law ⟸1044, 1129(1)—Questions as to other offenses not reversible error, where no motion to strike or assignment of error.

Where questions relative to other crimes of defendant were improper, but no motion was made to strike them out, nor was the court requested to instruct the jury to disregard them, and the matter is not assigned as error, there was no sufficient ground for reversal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

John Farrell, F. W. Clayton, and another were convicted of grand larceny, and defendant Clayton appeals. Affirmed.

F. W. Clayton, in pro. per.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Charles Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

FINCH, P. J. The defendants were convicted of the crime of grand larceny. Clayton prosecutes this appeal from the judgment of conviction and the order denying his motion for a new trial. The appellant was represented by an attorney at the trial, but has conducted his own case on appeal. As is usual under such circumstances, many of his assignments of error relate to matters not appearing in the record and therefore beyond the power of this court to consider.

[1] It is contended that the evidence is not sufficient to warrant a conviction. The defendants were accused of stealing a box of carpenter tools. The owner, who had left the tools in a Sacramento hotel, testified that they had been stolen and were of the value of $150. The proprietor of a secondhand store testified that the defendants appeared at his place of business and attempted to sell him the box of tools for $22; that the box was locked; that the defendants claimed to own the tools and that they had brought them from Stockton; that they said they had lost the key; that they then broke the lock to open the box; that while the tools were being examined a policeman entered, whereupon defendant Farrell "made a rush forward to try to get out of the store," but that the policeman "stopped him from going out." The policeman testified:

That "Farrell tried to get out the door on me, and I shoved him back and says: 'What's the matter here?' He says: 'I want to get out to get a piece of rope.' * * * I questioned him and asked him where the tools came from, and he said he met a fellow named O'Brien, and he wanted him to sell them, and said he was to get a couple of dollars out of them"; that appellant "had gone back and sat down in a chair and held a newspaper in front of him, and he denied ever being with Farrell, and said he never had anything to do with the tools."

There is no doubt as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.

[2] Appellant complains of certain questions propounded by the district attorney. Farrell was asked on cross-examination if he did not know that Clayton was charged in Los Angeles county with the crime of being a member of the I. W. W., and answered in the affirmative. On his cross-examination, Clayton was asked if he did not know that Farrell was charged in San Francisco with the same crime. He answered that he knew "for a fact that he is not an I. W. W." Counsel for defendant then made objection to this line of examination and the objection was promptly sustained. The questions were highly improper, but no motion was made to strike them out, nor was the court requested to instruct the jury to disregard them. The conduct of the district attorney in asking the questions was not assigned as error. Under the circumstances disclosed by the record, it uniformly has been held that such conduct is not sufficient ground for reversal.

It is claimed that "the court misdirected the jury in the matters of law." No instruction is pointed out as erroneous. A careful reading of the instructions shows that they are free from error.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

---

⟸For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

60 Cal. App. 386

SHARP v. EAGLE LAKE LUMBER CO. et al.
(Civ. 2507.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 8, 1923.)

1. Corporations ⊜617(1), 630(1)—Dissolved corporation legally dead, and not capable of suing or being sued or transacting other business.

When a corporation has been dissolved according to the provisions or mandates of the law, or its charter has been legally revoked, from the date of either event such corporation no longer exists as a legal entity; it is then legally dead, and it is no more capable of suing or being sued or of transacting any other business in its corporate name than is a natural person after passing from this life.

2. Corporations ⊜630(6)—Judgment entered against defunct corporation void.

A judgment, entered in an action instituted against a corporation after it has become defunct, and which is still nonexistent at the time of the trial of the action and entry of such judgment, may be impeached as void and its invalidity shown by any one interested, such as one entitled as a creditor or stockholder to participate in the assets of the corporation, or a stockholder liable for the debts of the corporation.

3. Corporations ⊜617(1)—Corporation an artificial person whose right and power to do things law declares it may do cease when right to exist as such terminates.

A corporation is an artificial person, to which (in a business sense) certain of the attributes and powers of a natural person are imparted by the lawmaking authority, and its right and power to do the things which the law has declared it may do cease the moment its right to exist as an artificial person or legal entity is terminated, just as the powers of a natural person to take part in mundane affairs cease to exist upon his death.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Corporation.]

4. Corporations ⊜630(3)—Service on vice president of defunct corporation without effect.

The service of summons on the individual who was vice president of a corporation while it had previously existed as a corporation was no service at all; the corporation having become defunct.

5. Judgment ⊜336—Remedy by motion to set aside on collateral ground such as fraud, held proper, if innocent third persons are not affected.

Where a judgment, though not void on its face, is for some collateral reason void, as, for instance, where it has been procured by means of fraud extrinsic to the merits of the case, and innocent third parties have acquired interests through or by virtue of the judgment, the more orderly course is to proceed by an independent suit in equity to set it aside or to restrain and prevent the party in whose favor the judgment has thus been procured from making an inequitable use thereof; but, where no innocent third parties are affected by the judgment, a motion in the case itself is a proper method of attack.

6. Judgment ⊜521—Motion to set aside not a collateral attack.

A motion to set aside a judgment in the court which rendered it is a direct, and not a collateral, attack, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1916.

7. Judgment ⊜386(3)—Motion made to set aside held within proper time.

Where a judgment was rendered December 1, 1920, and no rights of interested third parties intervene, a motion to vacate it, made August 26, 1921, a little over eight months after the rendition of the judgment, or within a year thereafter, was made within a reasonable time the judgment being void, but not appearing so upon its face; movant not being governed as to time by Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

Action by J. T. Sharp against the Eagle Lake Lumber Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying his motion to vacate the judgment and to recall execution and for perpetual stay, Frank L. Spencer, a stockholder in the defendant, appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Grover C. Julian, of Susansville, for appellant.

Butler & Van Dyke and Ben P. Tabor, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an appeal from the order denying appellant's motion to vacate the judgment entered in the case of J. T. Sharp, Plaintiff, v. Eagle Lake Lumber Company, Defendant, to recall the execution issued upon said judgment and to grant a perpetual stay of execution thereon.

On October 18, 1919, the plaintiff, as assignee of the Burton Lumber Company, a corporation, brought this action against the defendant, Eagle Lake Lumber Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Utah, to recover upon a promissory note for the sum of $1,000 executed by the Eagle Lake Lumber Company to the plaintiff's assignor and (as a second cause of action) to recover the further sum of $2,749.04, alleged to be a balance due from the Eagle Company, as we shall hereinafter refer to the Eagle Lake Lumber Company, for cash advanced, supplies furnished, services, etc., rendered by plaintiff's assignor to and for the former.

Summons was served on J. E. Solderholm, as vice president of the Eagle Company, the said summons having been served within the state of California. Said Eagle Company, through said Solderholm, answered the complaint, admitting the existence of the defendant as a corporation, admitting the execution of the promissory note as alleged and set out in the first count of the plaintiff's pleading, denying certain other allegations, including the averment that said note had not been paid, and denying the allegations of the second count of the complaint. The defendant also set up a special defense by way of confession and avoidance. As will later be perceived, it is unnecessary to the decision of this appeal to state herein the specific nature of the special defenses so pleaded.

The issues as made by the pleadings were tried by the court sitting without a jury, and the decision was in favor of the plaintiff on both counts or causes of action set up by him. Judgment passed accordingly. Thereafter execution was issued on said judgment and levied on certain lumber claimed by the appellant and one Thomas Coulter, who filed a third party claim. The levy was thereupon released, and the execution returned by the sheriff nulla bona.

When the levy was made, the appellant, Spencer, who, at the time of the rendition of the judgment, was, and "ever since has been," a stockholder of the Eagle Company, filed in the above-entitled action a verified petition and a notice of motion to recall the said execution and to vacate and set aside the judgment entered in said action and to perpetually stay execution thereon on the ground that, at the time of the commencement of the action and the purported service of summons on the Eagle Company, the said company was nonexistent, having previously to said times forfeited its charter. Annexed to and made a part of the petition was a certified copy of the proclamation of the Governor of the state of Utah, proclaiming that, pursuant to the provisions of an act of the Legislature of said state, approved March 22, 1909 (Laws 1909, c. 106), the said Eagle Lake Lumber Company, because of having defaulted in the payment of its license tax, which became due on the 15th day of November, 1918, had forfeited its right to carry on business in said state, and declaring that the right of said corporation so to carry on business was and is forfeited and the charter thereof revoked. This proclamation was made on and dated the 8th day of April, 1919, a trifle less than six months prior to the date of the institution of the above entitled action and the service of summons therein on the purported vice president of defendant.

The petition and the motion came on for hearing on the 30th day of August, 1921. At the hearing there was introduced in evidence the certificate of Frank C. Jordan, secretary of state of the state of California, certifying that the Eagle Lake Lumber Company, having failed to pay to the state of California the license tax due it, as required by an act of the Legislature of said state, approved May 10, 1915 (St. 1915, p. 422), and "relating to the terms and conditions upon which corporations may transact business in this state, * * * thereupon the right of said corporation to transact interstate business in this state became forfeited" on the 28th day of February, 1920.

It was stipulated by and between the parties, at the hearing of the petition, that the charter of said Eagle Company had not been revived, nor its right to do business as a corporation restored, since the date of the proclamation of the Governor of Utah declaring forfeited its rights to carry on business in said state and revoking its charter, viz. the 8th day of April, 1919.

As seen, upon the hearing and the argument of the matter by the attorneys for the respective parties in the above-entitled action, the court made an order denying the motion or petition.

The attorney for the plaintiff has not filed a brief herein, nor when the case was called for hearing by this court, was there any appearance for the plaintiff or oral argument made in support of the order appealed from. We must therefore decide the question presented without aid from the attorney for the plaintiff as to the hypothesis upon which it was maintained in the court below that the order should not be granted and upon which it still may be assumed that the order appealed from should be affirmed. We are of the opinion, however, that the motion should have been granted.

[1, 2] These legal propositions are thoroughly established and unassailable: (1) That when a corporation has been dissolved according to the provisions or mandates of the law, or its charter has been legally revoked, from the date of either event such corporation no longer exists as a legal entity, it is then legally dead, and it is no more capable of suing or being sued or of transacting any other business in its corporate name than is a natural person after passing from this life; (2) that a judgment entered in an action instituted against a corporation after it has become defunct, and which is still nonexistent at the time of the trial of the action, such judgment may be impeached as void and its invalidity shown by any one interested, "such as one entitled either as creditor or stockholder to participate in the assets of the corporation, or a stockholder liable for the debts of the corporation." Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 579, 581, 89 Pac. 335, 337.

[3, 4] As to the proposition first above stated, it would seem wholly unnecessary to cite authorities in support thereof. A corporation is an artificial person to which (in a business sense) certain of the attributes and powers of a natural person are imparted by the lawmaking authority, and its right and power to do the things which the law has declared it may do cease the moment its right to exist as an artificial person or legal entity is terminated, just as the powers of a natural person to take part in mundane affairs ceases to exist upon his death. In either case, obviously, there is no such person in existence. But, as already intimated, the proposition is entirely too banal to require its further discussion. It has been stated, though, in many cases, of which the following may be mentioned: Crossman v. Vivienda Water Co., 150 Cal. 575, 578, 89 Pac. 335; Newhall v. Western Zinc Co., 164 Cal. 380, 128 Pac. 1040; Slayden v. O'Dea (Cal. App.) 189 Pac. 1062; Van Landingham v. United Tuna Packers (Cal. Sup.) 208 Pac. 973. It, of course, follows from the proposition thus considered that the service of summons in the action upon the individual who was vice president of the Eagle Company while it still existed as a corporation was no service at all. Indeed, there could be no vice president or any other officer or agent of the corporation at the time of such service. With the death of a person, natural or artificial, the power or authority of his or its agents or officers as such ipso facto ceases or terminates. Of course, the purported service of process in this case was an absolute nullity, and the proceedings in the action and a judgment therein entered were coram non judice and void.

There remain to be considered, however, two other propositions, to wit: (1) Whether a motion to set aside the judgment in this case is the appropriate or the proper remedy; and, if so, (2) whether the motion to vacate the judgment was made within a reasonable time after the rendition and entry thereof.

[5, 6] 1. It is the general rule that, where a judgment, though not void upon its face, is for some collateral reason void, as, for instance, where it has been procured by means of fraud extrinsic to the merits of the case in which such judgment has been entered, and innocent third parties have acquired interests through or by virtue of the judgment, the more orderly course is to proceed by an independent suit in equity to set it aside or to restrain or prevent the party in whose favor the judgment has thus been procured from making an inequitable use thereof. In this case, however, there are not, as seen, innocent third parties affected by the judgment, and, besides, while the nullity of the judgment is not apparent from an inspection of the judgment roll, the proceeding, by way of petition or motion, looking to its vacation on the ground that it is void, was initiated in the action itself in which the judgment was rendered and entered. The relief asked was not only that the judgment be set aside, but that the execution thereupon issued be recalled and the issuance of execution thereon perpetually stayed. It would seem that a more direct attack against a judgment could hardly be thought of. It appears to be as direct as an appeal. It has, indeed, been held in this state that a motion to set aside a judgment in the court which rendered it is a direct and not a collateral attack. People v. Mullan, 65 Cal. 396, 4 Pac. 348; People v. Applegarth, 64 Cal. 229, 30 Pac. 805; People v. Greene, 74 Cal. 400, 16 Pac. 197, 5 Am. St. Rep. 448; People v. Pearson, 76 Cal. 400, 18 Pac. 424; Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., 97 Cal. 388, 392, 30 Pac. 585, 32 Pac. 452, 33 Am. St. Rep. 198. See, also, Dane v. Daniel, 28 Wash. 165, 68 Pac. 446; Morrill v. Morrill, 20 Or. 96, 25 Pac. 362, 11 L. R. A. 155, 23 Am. St. Rep. 95; 12 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 147J; note by Judge Freeman, 23 Am. St Rep. 103 et seq.; Code Civ. Proc. § 1916.

In Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., supra, wherein the motion was made upon a showing dehors the case itself, the invalidity of the judgment for want of jurisdiction of the person of the defendant not appearing from an inspection of the judgment roll, it is said:

"It is admitted that a motion to vacate a judgment is a direct and not a collateral attack; and if, as we hold, a motion was the proper proceeding in the case, of course any fact going to show the invalidity of the judgment could be presented at the hearing of such motion. Where a return shows that a nonresident was personally served with summons within the state, and it is made to appear to the court that such return was false, it would be strange if, within a reasonable time, the court could not, upon application, set aside the service, or the false return of service, and vacate the judgment. There is no reason why, in such a case, the nonresident should be put to the necessity of an independent action."

The Norton Case has been approvingly cited in a number of subsequent cases, of which we will mention only the case of Waller v. Weston, 125 Cal. 201, 57 Pac. 892, in which the motion, based upon the ground that the defendant had never been served with summons, and that the court consequently never acquired jurisdiction of his person, was supported by affidavits; such want of jurisdiction not being apparent from an inspection of the judgment roll.

[7] We now come to the question:

2. When, after the rendition of the invalid judgment, must a party prejudiced thereby take steps in the court in which it was rendered to destroy its apparent force before he will be held estopped by laches from proceeding by motion to set it aside? In other words, what is a reasonable time after such judgment has been rendered within which a party should so proceed in order to save his right to have the judgment vacated and so set at naught? As is readily to be understood, the appellant has not proceeded in pursuance of the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure; but it has been held in a number of cases that, where a motion is made to set aside a judgment not void upon its face, but which for some reason is invalid, the court has no power to grant the motion unless the same is made within a reasonable time, and that, while what is a "reasonable time" in such a case is not definitely determined by statute, "it will not extend beyond the time limit fixed by section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure." People, etc., v. Temple, 103 Cal. 447, 453, 37 Pac. 414, 415.

In Norton v. Atchison, etc., R. R. Co., supra, it is said, speaking of the time within which a motion such as the one here should be made after judgment rendered:

"Perhaps, following the analogy of section 473 [Code Civ. Proc.], six months might be considered the extent of a reasonable time."

In the case at bar, it will be noted, the judgment was rendered December 1, 1920, and a motion to vacate it made August 26, 1921, a little over eight months after the rendition of judgment or within a year thereafter.

We think that, under the circumstances of this case, the appellant was reasonably prompt in the taking of legal steps looking to the vacation and setting aside of the judgment. The judgment assailed had not been transferred to innocent third parties, nor had it been satisfied. Vested rights in innocent third parties had not grown out of the judgment. It was, as seen, substantially conceded by the plaintiff or his attorney at the hearing of the motion that the corporation was nonexistent when the action was brought and a summons purported to be served, and this concession necessarily carried with it the further concession that the judgment was absolutely void. In brief, it was not contended at the hearing below, nor is it contended here, that the judgment is not absolutely void.

Section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, among other things, that the court may relieve a party from a judgment, or order or other proceeding taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect:

"Provided, that application therefor be made within a reasonable time, but in no case exceeding six months after such judgment, order or proceeding was taken."

The time limit fixed by said provision of section 473 seems to be the criterion by which the appellate courts have generally determined what is a reasonable time for moving to set aside a judgment when such motion is not made under or by authority of such section. That particular part of said section, however, is not, it is obvious, appropriate to a motion to set aside a judgment. In other words, had the appellant, in seeking the relief asked for by him, invoked section 473, he would not and, indeed, could not, found his motion on that part of said section. But section 473 also contains this provision:

"When from any cause the summons in an action has not been personally served on the defendant, the court may allow, on such terms as may be just, such defendant or his legal representative, at any time within one year after the rendition of any judgment in such action to answer to the merits of the original action."

Upon the foregoing provision, in our opinion, the appellant here could have founded his motion, presenting or tendering therewith an answer setting up the fact, which appears clearly to be true, that the "defendant" was never personally served with summons, etc. It is plainly manifest, therefore, that that part of said section provides the only remedy to which the remedy invoked in this case bears any analogy, and thus we are led to inquire: Since the Legislature has in said section declared that a defendant not personally served may have a year from the time of the rendition of a judgment against him within which to move for permission to answer to the merits of the action in which such judgment has been rendered, why is it not the proper and, indeed, the only logical conclusion that the time limit thus fixed establishes the criterion by which it is to be determined what a "reasonable time" is for the institution of an analogous proceeding, in nature and effect, independently of or not founded upon said provision? A satisfactory negative reply to the question, it is believed, cannot be made; for we can conceive of no logical theory upon which it can be held that the six-month limitation prescribed by the section is alone applicable to a remedy whereby an entirely different object is intended to be accomplished, or, in other words, should be accepted as fixing the criterion for determining what is a "reasonable time" for instituting such a proceeding as we have here instead of the year limit prescribed by the same section as applicable to a proceeding substantially similar in nature and the object to be accomplished.

Our conclusion is that, in view of the circumstances of this case, the appellant should not be driven to an independent suit for the purpose of getting rid of the judgment in the present action, and that he proceeded for the accomplishment of that result in a proper way and within a reasonable time after the judgment had been rendered. This conclusion, we think, is not only legally warranted, but is in the interest of justice.

The order is reversed, with directions to the trial court to order the judgment vacated and set aside and the execution thereupon issued recalled and quashed.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

60 Cal. App. 260, 797

J. NAKATA v. GUARANTEE MORTGAGE CO.

K. ISHII v. SAME.

(Civ. 4373, 4370; S. F. 10048, 10062.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 27, 1922. Rehearing Denied Jan. 25, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 21, 1923.)

1. Venue ⟹8—Tort action for fraud in sale of corporate stock is maintainable where stock was sold.

An action in tort to recover damages caused to plaintiff by defendant's fraudulent representations in the sale of its corporate stock to plaintiff is maintainable under Const. art. 12, § 16, in the county where the stock was sold, which was the place where the tort was committed.

Opinion of Supreme Court Denying Hearing.

2. Venue ⟹7—Action to rescind contract for fraud may be brought where contract made.

Even though an action by the buyer of corporate stock claimed to be damaged by fraudulent misrepresentations, whereby he was induced to purchase the stock, was an action for rescission of the contract and recovery of the money paid, it may be brought in the county where the contract was made under Const. art. 12, § 16.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; C. E. Beaumont, Judge.

Separate actions by J. Nakata and by K. Ishii against the Guarantee Mortgage Company. From an order in each action denying defendant's motion for change of venue, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Leo J. McEnerney, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Iener W. Nielsen, of Fresno, for respondent.

Opinion in J. Nakata's Case.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to change the place of trial.

The plaintiff alleges in his complaint that he is a resident of Fresno county; that the defendant is a corporation; that on the 1st day of October, 1920, in the county of Fresno, plaintiff and defendant entered into a written agreement for the sale to the plaintiff of ten shares of the capital stock of the defendant corporation; that the price was to be $100 per share, and was to be paid by two promissory notes of even date, one in the sum of $875, and one in the sum of $1,625. That on the 1st day of December, 1920, plaintiff paid the note for $875, and he alleges that the defendant still holds the other note. It is alleged that the defendant's agent, for the purpose of inducing the plaintiff to make the purchase, represented at and in the county of Fresno "that within 90 days from date the selling price of said shares of capital stock would be $120 each"; that the stock had "a ready sale throughout the state of California," and that the defendant had sufficient moneys on hand "to make loans on real estate in the county of Fresno," and that the defendant "would pay the plaintiff 12 per cent. per annum" on the stock so purchased. It is then alleged that the said representations were false, and were knowingly made to deceive the plaintiff. The plaintiff then alleges "that, immediately upon discovering said representations so made by said agent of said defendant corporation, said plaintiff demanded of said defendant repayment of said sum of $875, together with interest, so paid by said plaintiff as aforesaid," etc. Thereupon the plaintiff prays judgment for the sum of $875, together with interest thereon from the 1st day of October 1920.

[1] From what we have just quoted it is patent that the plaintiff attempted to allege a cause of action as for fraud; that the tort was committed in Fresno county, and that he sued in that county for the damage which he incurred by the commission of the wrong complained of. Under this theory he was clearly within his rights. Const. art. 12, § 16; Tingley v. Times-Mirror Co., 144 Cal. 205, 206, 77 Pac. 918; George Cople Co. v. Hindes, 34 Cal. App. 576, 580, 170 Pac. 155. The appellant attempts to avoid the above position by claiming that the plaintiff's complaint pleaded an action as in rescission; that the notice of rescission was presumptively given to the defendant at its principal place of business in San Francisco; that, as the giving of that notice was the last step going to perfect the plaintiff's cause of action as for rescission, therefore the action should have been commenced in San Francisco, the residence of the defendant. Hammond v. Ocean Shore Dev. Co., 22 Cal. App. 167, 133 Pac. 978. But the frailty of this contention is presented by an examination of the complaint. It does not purport to allege that any notice of rescission was given, that plaintiff has acted promptly, or that he has restored, or offered to restore, anything to the defendant. Civ. Code, §§ 1689–1691. The position of the appellant seems to be a second thought. It now contends that the plaintiff's cause of action, if anything, is on an implied contract. However, when the appellant prepared its papers to move for the change of venue, it stated in its notice of motion that the motion would be made on the ground "that the liabilities sued on in the complaint" arose in San Francisco. The same expression was contained in the demand for change of place of trial. And the affidavit accompanying the notice and demand contained the positive statement that the plaintiff never "demanded of defendant the repayment" of the initial deposit $875.

The trial court did not err in denying the motion to change the place of trial, and the order appealed from is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

Opinion in K. Ishii's Case.

STURTEVANT, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to change the place of trial. The pleading in form is identical with the pleadings discussed in the opinion this day filed in the case of Nakata v. Guarantee Mortgage Co., No. 4373. The two cases were submitted on the same briefs.

For the reasons stated in the case cited, the order of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing in Both Cases.

PER CURIAM. [2] In denying the petitions for a transfer to this court, we deem it proper to say that we are inclined to agree with the petitioners that the action is one for the rescission of contract, for the prayer of the complaint is for the amount of money already paid and for the cancellation of the plaintiffs' promissory note. Kelley v. Owens, 120 Cal. 502, 510, 47 Pac. 369, 52 Pac. 797. Such an action may be brought in the county where the contract sought to be rescinded was made. Const. art. 12, § 16.

Petition denied.

WILBUR, C. J., and WASTE, MYERS, LENNON, LAWLOR, KERRIGAN, and SEAWELL, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal. App. 374

YRACEBURN et al. v. CAPE. (Civ. 4196.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 5, 1923.)

1. Replevin ⟸93—Trial court's finding that all allegations of complaint true covers every issue of fact presented by averments.

In replevin for recovery of sheep, with damages for their wrongful taking and detention by defendant, who set up a counterclaim for damages for their trespassing, alleging the sheep were estrays, held a finding of a trial court that all of the allegations of a complaint were true is sufficient in form to cover every issue of fact presented by its averments, and amounts to a finding that the plaintiffs' possession of the property sought to be replevied was rightful at the time of the defendant's taking of the same into his possession, and that the defendant's taking possession and detention thereof were and each of them was wrongful, and, being wrongful, such taking could not become a foundation for that portion of defendant's counterclaim based upon the provisions of the estrays laws, since it amounted in fact to a finding that plaintiffs' sheep, when taken by the defendant, were not estrays.

2. Replevin ⟸12(2)—Counterclaim for damages for trespassing of sheep held not permissible in replevin.

A counterclaim by defendant in an action for replevin for recovery of sheep, embracing a claim for damages for the trespass of the sheep upon the defendant's real estate, is not permissible.

3. Appeal and error ⟸1071(5)—When additional finding of trial court stated conclusion of law immaterial.

Whether in an action for replevin for recovery of sheep, alleged by defendant to have trespassed on his lands as estrays, an additional finding of the trial court that the plaintiff's sheep at the time of defendant's taking of them were not estrays was merely a conclusion of law is immaterial, where the general finding that defendant's taking of the sheep was wrongful amounted necessarily to a finding that the sheep were not liable to such taking and impounding as estrays.

4. Animals ⟸61—Evidence held to sustain finding sheep were not estrays trespassing on premises of impounder.

In replevin to recover sheep impounded by defendant as estrays trespassing on land, held that the court's finding that they were not "estrays" was sustained by conflicting evidence as to defendant's right to the possession of the premises upon which he claimed the sheep were trespassing, so as to entitle him to impound them under the Estray Laws (St. 1915, p. 636).

5. Animals ⟸61—Evidence held to sustain finding sheep were not estrays wandering at large.

In replevin for recovery of sheep impounded by defendant as "estrays" under the Estray Laws (St. 1915, p. 636), held that a finding that they were not "estrays," wandering at large when impounded, was sustained by conflicting evidence as to whether they were in charge of a herder.

6. Animals ⟸61—"Estrays" defined.

The term "estrays" at common law had had the well-defined meaning of animals found wandering at large, whose ownership was unknown, and animals are not to be classed as estrays or as animals running at large within the distraint statutes when such animals are in charge of a herder.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Estray.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Replevin by William Yraceburn and another against J. C. Cape. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fulstone & Rogers, of Fresno, for appellant.

W. D. Crichton, of Fresno, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an action in replevin for the recovery of the possession of about 690 sheep, with damages for their wrongful taking and detention by the defendant. The complaint is in the usual form in such actions, alleging that on a certain date in January, 1921, the plaintiffs were the owners and entitled to the possession of said sheep, and that thereafter, and while the said plaintiffs were so entitled to the same, that the defendant wrongfully and without plaintiffs' consent came into the possession of said personal property, and still retains the same and refuses to deliver the same to the plaintiffs upon their demand, to their damage in the sum of $1,000. The value of the sheep so taken and so held is alleged to be the sum of $8,625, for which sum together with such damages, plaintiffs pray alternative judgment in case the possession of said property cannot be obtained. The answer of the defendant consists of specific denials of the possession or right of possession of said sheep or any of them on the part of said plaintiffs; denies that their value is a sum in excess of $1,500, denies any wrongful taking or possession of the said property or the detention thereof to the plaintiffs' damage in any sum whatever. The defendant then proceeds to allege that on the date in January, 1921, alleged as the date of his wrongful taking of said property, he found said sheep trespassing and estrays upon certain real property then in his possession, and that he then and there took up and impounded said sheep under and by virtue of the estray laws of the state of California, and became and thereafter continued to be lawfully entitled to the custody and possession of the same for the satisfaction of his lien thereon thus acquired. The defendant also presented a counterclaim for damages in the sum of $400 for the trespass of said sheep upon his said lands, and also for the additional sum of $931.50, to which sum he alleged himself to be entitled for the impounding and custody of said sheep under the estray laws. To this counterclaim the plaintiffs filed an answer, denying all of its averments and praying that the defendant take nothing thereby. The cause came before the court, sitting without a jury, for trial upon the issues thus framed, and upon the conclusion thereof the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law. The findings of fact were brief, and were in the following form:

"The court finds that all of the allegations in plaintiffs' complaint are true and sustained by the evidence. The court further finds that all the said sheep and lambs described in plaintiffs' complaint, at the time they were taken up by the defendant, were not estrays."

As its conclusions of law from the foregoing findings of fact the trial court found that the plaintiffs were entitled to the possession of said sheep and to their costs, and entered its judgment accordingly. The court gave no alternative judgment, the sheep having been taken by the plaintiffs at the inception of the action under the provisions of the Code relating to claim and delivery. The defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, whereupon he took and now prosecutes this appeal.

[1, 2] The appellant's first contention is that the judgment must be reversed for the reason that the trial court had failed to find upon the material issues raised by the counterclaim. This contention is without merit for several sufficient reasons. The finding of the trial court that all of the allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint were true is sufficient in form to cover every issue of fact presented by its averments. Hayne, New Trial and Appeal, vol. 2, p. 1334 (Rev. Ed.). It amounted, therefore, to a finding that the plaintiffs' possession of the property in question was rightful at the time of the defendant's taking of the same into his possession, and that the defendant's taking possession and detention thereof were and each of them was therefore wrongful. Being wrongful, such taking could not become the foundation for that portion of the defendant's counterclaim which is based upon the provisions of the estray laws, since it amounted, in effect, to a finding that the plaintiffs' sheep when so taken by the defendant were not estrays. In so far as the defendant's counterclaim embraces a claim for damages for the trespass of the sheep upon the defendant's real estate, such counterclaim is not permissible in an action for replevin. Glide v. Kayser, 142 Cal. 419, 76 Pac. 50.

[3] The contention of the defendant that the additional finding of the trial court that the plaintiffs' sheep at the time of his taking them up were not "estrays" was merely a conclusion of law may or may not be true, but in any event it is immaterial, since the general finding of the trial court that the defendant's taking of said property was wrongful amounted necessarily to a finding that said property was not liable to such taking and impounding as "estrays."

[4] The appellant's next contention is that the finding of the trial court, whether express or implied, to the effect that the plaintiffs' sheep at the time of the defendant's taking and impounding of the same were not "estrays," is not sustained by the evidence in the case. As to this contention the evidence in the case is conflicting in two main aspects. The first of these relates to the right of the defendant to the possession of the premises upon which he claims the plaintiffs' sheep were trespassing and taken and impounded by him. The lands in that region are pasturage and unfenced lands, adaptable in the main only to the grazing of cattle and particularly of sheep. The defendant was not the owner of the lands to which he claims the right of possession, but based his claim of right thereto upon a lease which he had received from the owner for the previous year, and which had expired upon the last day of December of that year; and upon an alleged verbal renewal of said lease through the payment of a certain sum as rental for the year 1921 to a relative of the owner of the land. He failed, however, to show any right in such person to either receive such rental or extend such lease while, on the other hand, the owner of the land took the stand to testify that he had received no such rental, and had authorized no such renewal of the lease, but, on the contrary, had leased the lands to a person other than the defendant for grazing purposes for the year 1921. From such conflicting evidence the trial court may well have found that the defendant was not entitled to the possession of the premises upon which he claims the plaintiffs' sheep were trespassing, in which event the defendant would have no right to take up and impound said sheep under the estray laws. Stats. 1915, p. 636.

[5] The evidence is also conflicting as to whether at the time defendant took possession of the sheep they were "estrays" or were trespassing upon the premises claimed by the defendant. The evidence showed that up to a very short while before the defendant undertook to impound the sheep in question, they had been in the immediate custody of the plaintiffs' herder upon adjoining lands, to the possession of which the plaintiffs were entitled. The said herder, at the noon hour, had gone to his camp about a quarter of a mile from where the sheep were feeding, but within sight of the same, to eat his noonday meal. While his vigilance was thus temporarily relaxed, some of the sheep crossed the invisible and unfenced boundary line between the lands of the plaintiffs and those claimed by the defendant, whereupon the defendant, who was watching the same through a spyglass, sent two of his employees to take possession of and impound said sheep. While so doing, and while as yet a portion of the sheep were still upon the plaintiffs' premises, the herder returned and objected to the taking, but was warned off by the defendant's employees with threats of violence. The entire band of sheep were then taken possession of and impounded by the defendant, who refused to deliver the same to the plaintiffs upon their demand without payment of damages and the statutory costs assessable upon the impounding of estrays. Plaintiffs thereupon commenced this action, and took the sheep under claim and delivery. We are satisfied that upon this state of the evidence the trial court was justified in its finding to the effect that the said sheep, at the time of their attempted impounding by the defendant, were not "estrays" within the meaning of the act of 1915, under the provisions of which the defendant claimed the right to so impound said sheep.

[6] The term "estrays" at common law had the well-defined meaning of animals found wandering at large, whose ownership was unknown. Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawles (3d Rev.) tit. "Estrays"; Lyman v. Gepson, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 422; Walters v. Glats, 29 Iowa, 439; Kinney v. Roe, 70 Iowa, 509, 30 N. W. 776; Hardy v. Nye, 63 N. H. 612, 3 Atl. 631; Shepherd v. Hawley, 4 Or. 206. The state of California, from almost the inception of its legislative history, began the enactment of statutes having reference to animals which were estrays or were found wandering at large upon the highways or upon the lands of other persons than those of their owners. These were in the main special statutes varying in their application according to the varying state of development of the particular regions during the period of their emergence from pastoral into agricultural or horticultural conditions. The earliest act concerning estrays was adopted in 1851. Stats. 1851, p. 299. This act excepted from its operation a goodly number of the counties of the state, which in so far as they were settled at all, were chiefly pastoral. The act did not purport to define the term "estrays" but apparently adopted the common-law definition of that term, since the act made no provision for notice to nonowners, but, on the contrary, expressly required that the owner or owners of animals must be unknown. This act was from time to time amended or revised, retaining however, its essential features affecting the meaning of the term "estrays" by being given application to different sections of the state which were to be included or excepted from its operation according to their varying conditions, until the year 1897, when a new and general act relating to estrays was adopted (Stats. 1897, p. 198), and made applicable to the counties of the state generally. By the terms of section 9 of said act all other acts and parts of acts relating to estrays were expressly repealed. This act apparently gives to the term "estrays" as employed therein its common-law meaning of wandering animals whose ownership was unknown. Four years later this act was supplanted by the act of 1901 (Stats. 1901, p. 603), which act, however, in its original form undertook to work no change in the meaning of the term "estrays," as employed therein. The act of 1901 was, however, amended in 1907, in an important respect. Stats. 1907, p. 132. The amendment then adopted provided that in the event the owner's mark or print upon the animal had been recorded or the owner of the animal or person in charge thereof was known to the finder, he should be notified of the fact that the animal had been impounded, and where it was confined. The act of 1901 was again amended in an important particular in 1909 (St. 1909, p. 1079) by the insertion of, for the first time in the history of our state legislation on the subject, a definition of the word "estray" as follows:

"Sec. 2. The word 'estray' as used in this act is intended to include all domestic animals that have strayed upon, or been found upon, lands other than those of their owner, or the public domain, or lands whose owner (or to which the person in possession thereof) has consented, may be passed over, or allowed to be entered on, by such animal."

The act as thus amended remained in force until the year 1915, when it was again amended by the substitution of an entirely new set of sections for those embodied in the original act of 1901 and of its said amendment in 1909, and from which substituted sections the definition of the term "estrays" as above quoted was omitted, and the term was apparently used in its original signification, with the exception that under the act of 1915, in order to constitute animals, estrays, it was not necessary that the ownership of such animals should be unknown to the person finding and impounding such animal. Stats. 1915, pp. 636, 637. In other respects the term "estrays" retains its original significance as having reference to animals found wandering at large outside of the premises and beyond the restraint of their owner. This would seem to be made clear by a consideration of the case of Thompson v. Corpstein, 52 Cal. 536, which concerned the application of certain statutes to the running at large of the stock on the highways of Santa Clara county. The act of March 18, 1874, entitled "An act concerning roads and highways in the county of Santa Clara," provided in section 37 thereof for the taking up by roadmasters of animals found pasturing or running at large upon the public highways in violation of an act entitled "An act to amend an act concerning estrays and animals found running at large in the county of Santa Clara, passed April 27, 1863, and which amendatory act was approved March 27, 1872." Stats. 1873–74, pp. 453–464; Stats. 1863, p. 581; Stats. 1871–72, p. 580. In applying these several statutes to the case then at bar, the Supreme Court held that animals being driven along the highway in charge of a herder were not estrays or animals running at large within the meaning of said acts; and that this was true even though the herder had for the moment fallen asleep, and to that extent released his vigilance over said animals. In the case of Spect v. Arnold, 52 Cal. 455, a quite similar question was presented to the court in construing an ordinance of the town of Colusa, providing that it should be unlawful for certain designated kinds of cattle, including sheep, to run at large upon the streets, alleys, or public grounds of said town. The marshal of the town undertook to seize and impound the band of sheep which he claimed were running at large in violation of the ordinance. In an action brought to recover possession of the sheep by the owner thereof the undisputed evidence showed that the sheep were at the time in charge of a herder. The court held that they were not to be classed as animals running at large so as to be impounded under the terms of said ordinance. These two cases are in harmony with the doctrine declared in other jurisdictions, to the effect that animals are not to be classed as estrays or as animals running at large within the meaning of the distraint statutes when such animals are in charge of a herder. Roberts v. Barnes, 27 Wis. 422; Weber v. Hartman, 7 Colo. 13, 1 Pac. 230, 49 Am. Rep. 339; Shepherd v. Hawley, 4 Or. 206; Beeson v. Tice, 17 Ind. App. 78, 45 N. E. 612, 46 N. E. 154; Howrigen v. Bakersfield, 79 Vt. 249, 64 Atl. 1130, 9 Ann. Cas. 282, 286, and notes. These authorities would seem to have application to the facts of the case at bar, and to have justified the finding of the trial court that the animals in question were not estrays at the time they were attempted to be taken and impounded by the defendant herein. Further light might be thrown upon this subject by a consideration of the evolution of the fence law statutes of this state as interestingly reviewed by Mr. Justice Hart in the case of Blevins v. Mullally, 22 Cal. App. 519, 135 Pac. 307, and as further considered in the case of Davis v. Blasingame, 40 Cal. App. 458, 181 Pac. 104, which latter case had special reference to the application of certain of these statutes to the county of Fresno. The case of Montezuma Imp. Co. v. Simmerly, 181 Cal. 722, 189 Pac. 100, was also a case involving the continued trespassing of stock upon the plaintiffs' premises as giving ground for an injunction to enjoin such trespasses. None of these cases, however, involve the application of the estray laws, and we do not deem it necessary to go into a consideration of the statutes to which they refer, for the reason that in the instant case the defendant's sole claim of right to impound the plaintiffs' sheep is rested by both his pleadings and proof upon the claim that the plaintiffs' animals were estrays and were subject to be impounded by him under the estray laws of California; and for the further reason that there is at present no law upon our statute books permitting the impounding of trespassing animals which are not estrays, with the exception of those statutes which were expressly continued in force as to certain counties, by the terms of section 10 of the act of 1915, and which statutes have no reference or application to the county of Fresno. This being so, the foregoing authorities sufficiently justify the findings and conclusion of the trial court that under the facts as proven these animals were not, at the time of their taking by the defendant, estrays.

Judgment affirmed.

I concur: TYLER, P. J.

(60 Cal. App. 798)

YRACEBURN et al. v. CAPE. (Civ. 4195.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Jan. 5, 1923.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; J. E. Woolley, Judge.

Replevin by William Yraceburn and another against J. C. Cape. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fulstone & Rogers, of Fresno, for appellant.
W. D. Crichton, of Fresno, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The facts of the case being in the main identical with those in the case of Yraceburn v. Cape (No. 4196, this day decided) 212 Pac. 938, upon the authority of that decision the judgment herein is affirmed.

---

(60 Cal. App. 297)

ABRAMS v. DAUGHERTY, Commissioner of Corporations. (Civ. 4423.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 28, 1922.)

1. Licenses ⟸38—Broker entitled to notice before corporation commissioner can revoke certificate; "day in court."

In view of the rule that no one shall be personally bound until he has had his "day in court," meaning until he has been duly cited to appear and has been afforded an opportunity to be heard, even in the absence of any provision therefor in Corporate Securities Act 1917, a broker is entitled to a notice and hearing before the commissioner can revoke his certificate; though such hearing is contemplated by the act which authorizes revocation only when the commissioner "shall find" that the broker was guilty of one of the grounds specified in section 6.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Day in Court.]

2. Constitutional law ⟸318—Due process requires that notice to show cause why broker's certificate should not be revoked must state facts showing breach within statute.

The corporation commissioner has no authority to revoke a broker's certificate under Corporate Securities Act 1917, where the notice to show cause did not state facts showing that the broker had committed some breach within the act, not because the act requires the filing of charges, but because the constitutional guaranty of due process requires that the broker be allowed to appear and defend and rules of procedure demand that he be given such notice of the charge as will enable him to defend.

3. Licenses ⟸38—Notice to show cause why certificate should not be revoked held insufficient to give jurisdiction.

In a proceeding under Corporate Securities Act 1917 to revoke a broker's certificate, a notice to show cause which contained no charges and nothing from which broker could ascertain what he would be required to defend was insufficient to give the corporation commissioner jurisdiction either to suspend or revoke the certificate.

4. Licenses ⟸38—Finding in proceeding to revoke certificate that broker had engaged, or was about to engage, in fraudulent transaction, not sustained.

In a proceeding under Corporate Securities Act 1917 to revoke a broker's certificate, evidence held not to sustain a finding that he had engaged, or was about to engage, in a fraudulent transaction.

5. Fraud ⟸50—Presumption against fraud.

The presumption is always against fraud.

6. Fraud ⟸58(1)—Clear evidence required.

One who seeks relief from fraud must prove it by clear and satisfactory evidence; a mere suspicion not being sufficient.

7. Licenses ⟸38—Presumption against fraud available to broker in proceeding to revoke his certificate.

The presumption against fraud is available to broker charged therewith in a proceeding to revoke his certificate, and it can be overcome only by clear and satisfactory proof.

8. Licenses ⟸38—Corporation commissioner can suspend certificate only when jurisdiction of broker is obtained.

If it may be assumed under Corporate Securities Act 1917 that the power of the corporation commissioner to suspend a broker's certificate is to be implied from the grant of power of revocation, such power may be exercised pending a hearing of charges only when the commissioner has obtained jurisdiction to proceed with a hearing.

Proceedings under the Corporate Securities Act to revoke the certificate of Alexander R. Abrams, a broker. Edwin M. Daugherty, as Commissioner of Corporations, ordered the certificate suspended temporarily, and said Abrams brings certiorari. Order annulled.

Roy A. Bronson, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and H. H. Linney, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is a proceeding in certiorari to review the action of the respondent as commissioner of corporations of the state of California in temporarily suspending the certificate authorizing petitioner to act as a broker under the provisions of the Corporate Securities Act of 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 673). The respondent has filed a return, which, in addition to a large amount of extraneous and immaterial matter, contains a copy of a notice to the petitioner to show cause why his certificate should not be revoked, a transcript of certain evidence taken before the commissioner in response to said notice, and a copy of the order of suspension. The notice of hearing was mailed to the petitioner herein and was in the words and figures following:

"You are hereby notified to appear at this office at 2:30 p. m., on Friday, September 29, 1922, to show cause why your broker's certificate should not be revoked."

At the time set an attorney appeared for the petitioner, and at his request the hearing was continued until the following day. At that time, the attorney again being present, testimony was taken by the deputy commissioner of a witness who claimed that he had purchased stock of the Coast Tire & Rubber Company upon representations made by selling agents of the petitioner herein that said stock would soon increase in value and that a dividend thereon would soon be paid. This witness further testified that he had been for some time prior thereto a stockholder in the Coast Tire & Rubber Company, had received several reports of the financial condition from the officers of the company, had visited its plant, and that he did not believe everything that the salesmen had stated to him, but doubted their representations that the stock would increase in value and that a dividend would soon be paid. He also testified that the agents represented to him that if he became dissatisfied with his purchase the petitioner herein would sell his stock at market and that he had requested the petitioner to do so, but had been unable to obtain from the petitioner any satisfactory reply as to whether such sale would be made. Upon this evidence the commissioner executed the order temporarily suspending the petitioner's certificate to act as a broker. This order was made on October 3, 1922, and, it is alleged, is still outstanding.

Respondent concedes that the only grounds upon which he may revoke a license or certificate issued under the act are those contained in section 6 of the act. That is to say, that before the commissioner could justify a revocation of the license it was necessary that he should find that the petitioner: (a) Was of bad business repute; (b) had violated some provision of the act; or (c) had engaged or was about to engage in a fraudulent transaction. It is also conceded that this court may examine the evidence taken by the commissioner in order to ascertain whether the commissioner exceeded his authority in making the order.

The commissioner did not make any finding of any nature, but from an examination of the evidence it is apparent that his action was based upon the ground designated "c" above, because no competent evidence was produced to support either grounds "a" or "b." An attempt was made to have the witness testify as to the business reputation of the petitioner, but the witness disqualified himself from giving such testimony. Treating the case then as one in which the broker was charged as having engaged in or being about to engage in a fraudulent transaction, it is necessary to consider whether the petitioner was accorded the due process of law to which he was entitled before an order of revocation could be made.

The statute is silent upon the matter of the procedure to be followed in cases of this kind, except that it does require the commissioner to find the broker guilty of one of the three designated causes. In Bannerman v. Boyle, 160 Cal. 197, 205, 116 Pac. 732, the Supreme Court, in considering the provisions of the San Francisco charter authorizing the mayor to remove certain officers "for cause," held that, in the absence of clear statutory authority, such power of removal could not be exercised until "notice has been given to the officer of the charges made against him and he has been given an opportunity to be heard in his defense." The charter did not fix any mode of procedure and did not specify any grounds for removal. It merely authorized the mayor to remove "for cause," and the court held (at page 206 of 160 Cal., at page 735 of 116 Pac.) that "the words 'for cause,' without more, imply good cause; the existence of some fact which would constitute a reasonable cause for the removal." To the same effect is Welch v. Ware, 161 Cal. 641, 119 Pac. 1080, where the court had under consideration the provisions of section 4149b of the Political Code which authorized the removal of a fish and game warden "for intemperance, neglect of duty, or other good and sufficient reasons." It was argued that the language "good and sufficient reasons" authorized the board of supervisors to remove the warden summarily and without charges filed or a hearing thereon; but the court held that the case was controlled by Bannerman v. Boyle, supra, and that there was no essential difference between the Code section and the provisions of the charter authorizing a removal "for cause." It was said that—

"Under such provision of the Code the respondent could only be legally removed after an opportunity to be heard on charges preferred against him."

In these cases, as in the statute under consideration, there was no provision for a notice and hearing before the action was taken. In this respect the statute differs from the medical practice act (Stats. 1913, p. 722, § 14, amended St. 1921, p. 1009), the real estate brokers' act (Stats. 1919, p. 1252, § 12), and similar acts which specifically require the filing of formal charges and a hearing thereon before a license can be revoked. But the silence of the statute in this respect is of no importance if the right to act as a broker is a property right of which the holder may not be deprived without due process of law.

In Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 590, 592, 84 Pac. 39, 40 (3 L. R. A. [N. S.] 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315, 7 Ann. Cas. 750), the Supreme Court says:

"The right to practice medicine is, like the right to practice any other profession, a valuable property right, in which, under the Constitution and laws of the state, one is entitled to be protected and secured."

In Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 249, 187 Pac. 965, 966, in referring to this principle, the court say:

"The Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. Article 1, § 1, of the Constitution of California, provides that all men have certain inalienable rights, among them being those of enjoying liberty and possessing and protecting property, and section 13 thereof provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The deprivation of such right without due process of law would be a violation of these provisions. The meaning of this is that no one can be deprived thereof without notice and an opportunity for a hearing before some tribunal authorized to determine the question."

To the same effect is Brecheen v. Riley, 187 Cal. 121, 124, 200 Pac. 1042, 1044, where the court, having the real estate brokers' act under consideration, say:

"It is firmly established that it is the right of every person to pursue any lawful business or vocation he may select, subject to such legal restrictions and regulations as the proper governmental authority may impose for the protection and safety of society, and that such right is valuable and must be protected and secured, and cannot be taken from those who possess it, without 'due process of law.'"

In Schomig v. Keiser (Cal. Sup.) 209 Pac. 550, 551, while considering the same act, the court say:

"The portion of the act which authorizes the real estate commissioner to forfeit the license of a broker or salesman and take it away from him is highly penal in its nature, and should not be construed to include anything which is not embraced within its terms."

In Hovey v. Elliott, 167 U. S. 409, 418, 17 Sup. Ct. 841, 844 (42 L. Ed. 215) it is said:

"It is a rule as old as the law, and never more to be respected than now, that no one shall be personally bound until he has had his day in court, by which is meant, until he has been duly cited to appear, and has been afforded an opportunity to be heard. Judgment without such citation and opportunity wants all the attributes of a judicial determination; it is judicial usurpation and oppression, and can never be upheld where justice is justly administered." (Italics ours.)

[1] Applying the rule to this case, it would follow that, even in the absence of any provision in the statute, a broker is entitled to a notice and hearing before the commissioner can revoke his certificate. Such a hearing is plainly contemplated by the act which authorizes revocation only in the event that the commissioner "shall find" that the broker is guilty of one of the three grounds of revocation specified. A "finding" of the existence of certain facts presupposes some hearing of evidence tending to prove such facts.

"The judicial function is to decide on the property or rights of the citizen (Robinson v. Board of Supervisors, 16 Cal. 210; Imperial W. Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 162 Cal. 18 [120 Pac. 780]; 11 Cor. Jur. 122); to declare the law and define the rights of the parties under it (Frasher v. Rader, 124 Cal. 134 [56 Pac. 797]); to determine what shall be adjudged or decreed between the parties (Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 37 U. S. 718 [9 L. Ed. 1233; see, also, Rose's U. S. Notes]); to decide with whom is the right of the case (People v. Board of Supervisors, 122 Cal. 421 [55 Pac. 131]); to ascertain existing rights or establish a title or to determine the rights of the controversy between the parties (Title, etc., Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 320 [119 Am. St. Rep. 199, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 88 Pac. 356]). The determination that plaintiff was guilty and that his right to practice should be suspended comes clearly within the scope of these definitions." Suckow v. Alderson, 182 Cal. 247, 250, 187 Pac. 965, 966.

The very basis of a judicial or quasi judicial hearing at which property rights are determined presupposes some sort of process by which the interested party is put upon his notice as to the time, place, and nature of the hearing. Where the statute requires the filing of charges and notice of the hearing thereon, it has been uniformly held that the one accused must be given such notice of the nature of the charge against him as will enable him to formulate a defense. Dyment v. Board of Med. Examiners (Cal. App.) 207 Pac. 409, 411, and cases there cited. That case involved a construction of section 14 of the Medical Practice Act as amended in 1917 (Stats. 1917, p. 109). The section provides in part:

"Whenever any holder of a certificate herein provided for is guilty of unprofessional conduct, as the same is defined in this act, * * * or whenever a certificate has been procured by fraud or misrepresentation * * * it shall be the duty of said board * * * to revoke his certificate."

The same section provides that no certificate shall be revoked unless the holder has been cited to appear and answer to a sworn complaint. In the Dyment Case a complaint was filed charging that the physician had procured his certificate through fraud and misrepresentation. It was this complaint which the District Court of Appeal held to be insufficient to give the board jurisdiction of the hearing. In denying a petition to transfer the case to the Supreme Court, the latter court approved this ruling of the District Court of Appeal and held further that, even though the insufficiency of the complaint was not attacked prior to the hearing before the board, the proceedings should be set aside in certiorari upon the ground that the board did not have jurisdiction to make the order. The language of the Supreme Court on the question of the insufficiency of the complaint is particularly applicable to the present case:

"It contains no specific allegations of fact, but merely states that he 'procured by fraud and misrepresentation a certificate to practice medicine.' Such method of charging fraud has always been held insufficient; the specific facts must be stated. (9 Ency. of Pl. & Prac. 686; 31 Cyc. 55.)" (Cal. App.) 207 Pac. 409, 412.

[2] Applying the rule to the present case, it follows that, even though an attorney appeared for petitioner at the time noticed, the commissioner would not have jurisdiction to make the order if the complaint or notice did not state facts showing that the petitioner had committed some breach within the purview of the act. This is so, not because the statute requires the filing of charges against the broker, but because the constitutional guaranty of due process of law requires that he be allowed to appear and defend, and the established rules of procedure demand that the accused shall be given "such notice of the nature of the charge against him as will enable him to formulate a defense." Dyment v. Board of Medical Examiners (Cal. App.) 207 Pac. 409, 411. The rule is particularly applicable here for two reasons: (1) The proceeding is "highly penal in its nature" (Schomig v. Keiser [Cal. Sup.] 209 Pac. 550); and (2) the only conceivable ground of revocation was based upon fraud and misrepresentation, and the accused should have been notified of the facts constituting the fraud or misrepresentation (Dyment v. Board of Med. Examiners [Cal. App.] 207 Pac. 409, 412).

[3] The notice mailed to the petitioner was merely an order to show cause why his certificate should not be revoked. It contained no charges of any nature and nothing from which he could ascertain what he would be required to defend. It was therefore insufficient to give the commissioner any jurisdiction to either suspend or revoke the certificate.

[4-7] In addition to this, assuming, as we must, that the commissioner's action was based upon the ground that petitioner "has engaged, or is about to engage in any fraudulent transaction," a review of the evidence fails to support the finding. The only evidence which the commissioner could consider was that taken at the hearing in the presence of petitioner's counsel. This consisted of the testimony of one witness to the effect that he had purchased certain shares of corporate stock through petitioner's agents and upon their representations that the stock would increase in value, would soon pay a dividend, and that petitioner would sell the stock at market on demand of the witness. There was no evidence that these representations were false or that the witness relied upon them. There was no evidence that the petitioner knew that the representations were made, or that, if made, they were false. There was no evidence that the agents who made the representations knew, or had reason to know, that they were false or fraudulent. There was no evidence that the petitioner had engaged in or that he was about to engage in a fraudulent transaction. "The presumption is always against fraud. This presumption approximates in strength that of innocence of crime. Truett v. Onderdonk, 120 Cal. 581, 588, 53 Pac. 26. One who seeks relief from fraud must allege it and prove it by clear and satisfactory evidence. A mere suspicion of fraud is not sufficient." Everett v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 45 Cal. App. 332 338, 187 Pac. 996, 998. This presumption was available to the petitioner in this proceeding and could be overcome only by clear and satisfactory proof. If we may assume that the commissioner found fraud, the evidence was insufficient to support the finding. If the finding was based upon either of the other grounds specified in the statute, there was no evidence at all to support the finding.

[8] The petitioner argues with considerable force that the commissioner had no power to suspend his certificate because such power is not expressly conferred by the statute. The commissioner contends that the power to suspend is incidental to the power to revoke and is to be implied from the grant of the power of revocation; and that the power of suspension should be exercised pending a hearing of the charges and a determination of the question whether the certificate should be revoked. Similar statutes examined expressly confer such power. If we may assume that it is to be implied from the grant of the power of revocation, it nevertheless may be exercised only when the commissioner has obtained jurisdiction to proceed with a hearing and determination of that question. If this were not so, the commissioner could, as has been done in this case, order a temporary suspension and continue the order indefinitely, thus depriving the broker of his right to do business without any legal process whatever.

Other points raised do not require consideration.

The order is annulled.

We concur: LANGDON, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

60 Cal. App. 309

CHANAN SINGH et al. v. CROSS et al.
(Civ. 4367.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 29, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 26, 1923.)

1. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1) — Testimony held to show leased land was ready for irrigation about May 1st.

In an action for breach of a landlord's agreement to furnish water for leased land sufficient to raise a crop of rice, a finding that the premises were ready for irrigation about May 1st was supported by testimony by plaintiff that he had sown the rice the first part of May and his statement on cross-examination that he sowed it on the 1st day of May.

2. Landlord and tenant ⟸103(3)—Lease held to give tenant reasonable time to exercise option after right approved.

Where the lease gave the tenant the option of terminating it if it was impracticable for the landlord to commence supplying water on April 25th, but did not specify the time within which the option must be exercised, the option accrued on the day fixed, but the tenant had a reasonable time thereafter within which to exercise it, under Civ. Code, § 1657.

3. Landlord and tenant ⟸103(3)—Reasonable time within which to exercise option to surrender lease is question of fact.

Whether a tenant had a reasonable time in which to exercise his option to surrender a lease after the landlord had failed to furnish water for irrigation depends upon the particular circumstances, and is a question of fact.

4. Landlord and tenant ⟸112½, New, vol. 9A Key-No. Series — Evidence held to sustain finding option to surrender was exercised by tenants within reasonable time after landlord's default.

Evidence that a landlord failed to furnish irrigation water as agreed on April 25th, but that he requested the tenants to remain on the premises, and promised to furnish water within a short time, continually repeating the promise until it became evident on June 4th that the water could not be furnished in time to make a crop, and that the land would have been valueless to another lessee without water, so that the landlords lost no right to re-lease the premises, held to sustain a finding that the exercise by the tenants of their option to surrender the premises on June 4th was within a reasonable time.

5. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1) — Lease held to entitle tenants to expenditures up to date of surrender; "cost of work."

Where a lease gave the tenants the option to surrender the premises if water was not furnished by April 25th, and the lessor agreed thereupon to pay the lessees the cost of the work already done by them, the lessees were entitled, not only to the cost of the work done before the date specified, but to the cost of all work done by them prior to the giving of notice of the exercise of their option, which was the time to which the word "thereupon" referred.

6. Landlord and tenant ⟸94(6)—Insufficiency of oral notice of surrender is immaterial.

It is immaterial that an oral notice by tenants of the exercise of their option to surrender the lease was insufficient under the lease, and that the landlords had not waived their right to written notice, where a written notice was served four days after the oral notice was given, which was within a reasonable time for the exercise of the option.

7. Evidence ⟸467—Waiver may be shown by circumstances.

Waiver may be shown by parol evidence, and proof of express language is not necessary, but it may be shown by circumstances or a course of acts or conduct.

8. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1)—On failure to furnish water cost of seed sown is part of "cost of work" done by tenants before surrender.

Where the lease gave the tenants the option to surrender it if the landlords failed to furnish water for irrigation within the time agreed, and required the landlords to repay to the tenants the cost of work done by them in preparing to raise a crop of rice, the cost of work was not limited to the actual cost of labor performed upon the land, but included the cost of the rice seed sown.

9. Landlord and tenant ⟸109(2)—Option to surrender for fixed price is valid.

Even though a provision in the lease giving the tenants the right to surrender the premises if irrigating water was not furnished, and requiring the landlords in that event to repay to the tenants the cost of work done by them, did not fall within the exception created by Civ. Code, § 1671, permitting the parties to a contract to agree upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damages sustained when from the nature of the case it would be difficult to fix the actual damages, that provision can be sustained as one giving the tenants an option to surrender and recover an agreed sum.

10. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1) — Rent paid in advance is recoverable as part of the cost of work by tenants.

Where a lease gave the tenants an option to surrender the premises if irrigating water was not furnished, and required the landlords to repay the cost of the work done on the land, the tenants, on exercising their option to surrender the premises, could recover the rent theretofore paid by them in advance, since the payment of that rent was a condition precedent to the performance of any work upon the land.

11. Waters and water courses ⟸158½(1) — Wages of men kept in readiness to irrigate land held part of cost of work.

Where landlords failed to furnish water for irrigation at the time specified, but kept conditionally promising the tenants to furnish the water within a short time, the tenants were entitled, on exercising their option for the landlords' failure to furnish the water and to recover the cost of the work performed by them, to recover the wages paid by them to employees whom they kept upon the land in readiness to perform work thereon when the water should be received.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Chanan Singh and others against P. B. Cross, and others, individually and as copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Provident Irrigation Syndicate. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Bacigalupi & Elkus, of San Francisco, and Frank Freeman, of Willows, for appellants.

Albert Jacoby, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for $4,000 against the defendants P. B. Cross, Joseph Carlson, Alden Anderson, and Howard M. Payne in an action to recover damages alleged to have been caused to plaintiffs by reason of the breach by said defendants of an agreement for the leasing of certain lands in the county of Colusa, state of California.

The controversy arises over the construction of this lease, which covered a period of two years, and in which plaintiffs were the lessees and appellants the lessors of a tract of land in Colusa county, Cal. The lessees agreed to pay a certain rental and to prepare the land for the planting of rice and to plant rice upon the same, and to do all irrigating, weeding, harvesting, sacking, threshing, and hauling of the rice. The lessor promised "to furnish water at his own cost and expense in an amount usual in said locality for maturing rice that may then be planted upon said premises, and agreed that said water shall be made available for use not later than the 25th day of April of each year of the term hereby created and to be furnished continuously during the season. In the event it is impracticable to commence the supply of water by the 25th day of April, 1918, then the lessee shall have the option of terminating this lease, and in the event that they exercise their option of so terminating the lease, they shall serve written notice upon the lessor notifying him of their election so to do. The lessor agrees thereupon to pay to the lessees the cost of the work already done by the lessees, and in addition thereto ten per cent. of said cost, which the lessees agree to accept in full payment and satisfaction of all damages, demands and rights."

The trial court found that the lease had been made by the parties as set out in the pleadings; that pursuant to its terms the plaintiffs had entered upon the premises as lessees thereof, and within proper season and in accordance with the proper manner of raising, cultivating, and maturing rice, and in a good and farmerlike manner prepared all of the land and performed all necessary development work upon said land to effect an efficient and proper handling of a rice crop thereon, during the seasons described in the lease, and did immediately sow the same to rice, and the said described lands and premises were, about the 1st day of May, 1918, properly prepared and within due and proper season and in accordance with the local custom of raising rice in the locality of said premises and were ready and in condition to receive irrigation water at that time.

The findings further recite that the plaintiffs were rice farmers of long experience; that in order to mature a rice crop upon said lands it was necessary that the same be supplied with an adequate amount of irrigation water in due and proper season; that on or about May 1, 1918, the plaintiffs demanded of said P. B. Cross, acting for himself and the said codefendants, a supply of irrigation waters to be delivered upon said lands, but at that time and at all times subsequent thereto defendants failed and neglected to furnish a sufficient, adequate, or any quantity of water for the purpose of irrigating said lands, except an amount to partially and inefficiently and inadequately supply about 10 acres of said premises; that continuously, since about the 1st of May, 1918, to and including the 4th day of June, 1918, plaintiffs did from time to time demand of said defendants that they deliver to them to and upon said lands and premises a quantity of irrigation water sufficient to irrigate said lands so as to enable plaintiffs to grow and mature a crop of rice thereon; that from about May 1, 1918, plaintiffs demanded from time to time of defendants irrigation waters, and defendants promised plaintiffs to deliver to them such waters according to the requirements of said lease, but at all times failed to do so in an adequate or in any quantity sufficient to mature a rice crop thereon; that at many times between the latter part of April, 1918, and the 5th day of June, 1918, plaintiffs demanded the receipt of irrigation waters upon said premises for said purposes, and the said P. B. Cross, for himself and his codefendants, by promises and inducements prevailed upon plaintiffs from time to time to await the delivery of water until defendants completed the construction of certain laterals and ditches running to the lands of plaintiffs, and that by said promises and inducements and overtures made by said defendants to said plaintiffs, to the effect that water would be delivered immediately to said plaintiffs, said plaintiffs were induced and prevailed upon to defer and postpone the termination of said lease from time to time until the 4th day of June, 1918; that on the said 4th day of June, 1918, at Willows, Cal., and after plaintiffs had done and performed the matters and things on said lands hereinbefore set forth, and as is in said lease provided, and in all other respects fully performed the said lease pursuant to its terms, and after said defendants had failed and neglected to carry out the terms and conditions of said lease contract with reference to furnishing or supplying an adequate, proper, and sufficient supply of water to and upon said lands as aforesaid, and after plaintiffs had been prevailed upon, as aforesaid, to defer any acts with respect to the termination of said lease, plaintiffs verbally notified defendant P. B. Cross, acting for himself and his codefendants, that they did then and there terminate the said lease on account of defendants' failure to furnish a supply of water as aforesaid, and plaintiffs did then and there demand of defendant P. B. Cross, acting as aforesaid, the moneys expended by plaintiffs upon said lands and premises in the cost of work and development thereof, together with 10 per cent. of said moneys, and the said P. B. Cross, acting for himself and as aforesaid, did then and there demand of plaintiffs that they forthwith furnish to him a full and complete statement of their said expenditures and costs incurred up to and including the said 4th day of June, 1918, and did then and there agree to repay to said plaintiffs such moneys expended as aforesaid, together with 10 per cent. damages as provided for in said lease, and plaintiffs did prepare and submit such a statement to defendants on or about June 4, 1918, and said defendants failed, neglected, and refused to pay the same; that said statement showed an expenditure of $4,405.54 by plaintiffs. Thereafter, and on or about June 5, 1918, at Willows, Cal., the said P. B. Cross, acting for himself and as aforesaid requested said plaintiffs to defer the termination of the said lease until July 15, 1918, and, in the event the said defendants failed to supply the proper and necessary irrigation waters by said July 15, 1918, that the said defendants would then pay to said plaintiffs the moneys expended by them as aforesaid, together with the 10 per cent. provided for by said lease, and said defendants did further request said plaintiffs to remain upon said premises and apply the said waters when the same would be available about July 15, 1918, to the said lands prepared by plaintiffs, all of which the said plaintiffs did then and there refuse to do, placing no further reliance on defendants' promises.

Plaintiffs then went to San Francisco and sought advice, and on or about the 8th day of June, 1918, and through their attorney at San Francisco, plaintiffs executed and served upon said defendant P. B. Cross, acting for himself and as aforesaid, an additional and further notice in writing of the termination of said lease; that said notices were given in due season, and in time to permit a crop of rice to be thereafter grown on said land, provided water could be thereafter supplied thereto. The said notices of termination of said lease, given by plaintiffs as aforesaid, to said defendant P. B. Cross, acting for himself and as aforesaid, were so given and served within a reasonable time, and pursuant to the terms of said lease agreement. During all the times that plaintiffs were engaged in preparing said lands and doing the work aforesaid, and up to the 5th day of June, 1918, the said defendant P. B. Cross and the agents and employees of said defendants were in, on, or about the said described premises.

[1] Before considering the law applicable to the facts as found by the trial court and recited herein, it seems expedient to consider the objections of the appellant that some of these findings are not sustained by the evidence. Particular objection is made to the finding that the premises were ready for irrigation water "about the 1st day of May, 1918." Appellants state in their brief that "the undisputed evidence is that the land was not even then sown to rice." In making this statement the appellants have overlooked the testimony of the plaintiff Chanan Singh, who stated several times that he had sown the rice the "first part of May." He repeated this upon cross-examination, and added the further definite statement: "I sowed the rice on the 1st day of May." This testimony is sufficient to sustain the finding of the court to which appellants object. The findings to the effect that the plaintiffs were induced to continue upon the land from time to time by reason of certain promises of the defendants are sustained by the testimony of the plaintiff Chanan Singh, and also by the testimony of his attorney, who discussed the matter with the defendant Cross.

[2] Before considering the finding that the plaintiffs exercised, within a reasonable time, their right to terminate the lease, we shall discuss the objection of appellants that the lease did not give to plaintiffs a reasonable time within which to exercise such option. This question, appellants concede is the main issue in the case. The lessor agreed that water would be "made available for use not later than the 25th day of April of each year for the term hereby created and to be furnished continuously during the season." It was further agreed that—

> "In the event that it is impracticable to commence the supply of water by the 25th of April, 1918, then the lessees shall have the option of terminating this lease."

[3, 4] No date is specified at which such option must be exercised. It is apparent that the right to exercise the option accrued to the plaintiffs on April 25th, when the water was not furnished. No date being specified within which said option should be exercised, the plaintiffs would have a reasonable time within which to exercise the same. Section 1657, Civ. Code. Appellants also object to the finding that the option was exercised by the plaintiffs within a reasonable time. The question as to what is a reasonable time for the performance of an act under a contract fixing no time for such performance depends upon the nature of the contract and the particular circumstances. It was a question of fact for the court in the present case. The circumstance that the defendants continually promised plaintiffs that water would be furnished is material. Such promises would make it reasonable for the plaintiffs to wait, in good faith, from day to day. Furthermore, the defendants were not damaged by the delay. The court has found that the land was properly prepared and sowed with rice. The defendants were unable to furnish water until after June 1st. The land was valueless without water, as no crop could be raised. Defendants, therefore, would have been unable to rent the land to any one. As plaintiffs were working upon the land in anticipation of a crop, up to the time they terminated their lease, defendants' only loss occurs by reason of their own failure to furnish water. Had plaintiffs terminated the lease earlier, other lessees on the land could have done no more toward raising a crop in the absence of water for irrigation. It was at the request of the defendants that plaintiffs continued on the land, working on the same and expecting water from day to day. If defendants never reaped any benefit from this work, it was because of their failure to supply water. When it became evident that the water would be too late to assure plaintiffs a crop, they exercised their option to recover their expenditures and terminate the lease. Under all the circumstances in evidence, particularly the requests of defendants, as narrated by Chanan Singh, that plaintiffs allow them a little more time to furnish water, and the additional circumstance that defendants could have been in no better position with regard to raising a crop on the land had plaintiff abandoned the land earlier, we think the finding of the court that the option was exercised within a reasonable time was a proper one.

[5] Appellants contend that the trial court erred in considering evidence of work done upon the land after April 25th and up until the time of the notice of termination of the lease. Appellants' position upon this question is that, regardless of what might be a reasonable time in which to exercise the option, under the terms of the lease, the obligation of the lessors was fixed and limited by the situation of the parties on the day the option accrued—April 25th. In other words, it is contended that the lessors were only obligated to pay for work done up to April 25th, and, although the plaintiffs might have a reasonable time thereafter within which to exercise their option, they must discontinue work upon the land during that time, or do such work without hope of being compensated therefor, although defendants were requesting them to continue their work. It must be admitted that this question is one that is not free from difficulties, but we are of the opinion that, in regard to this matter, the contract is susceptible of the interpretation placed upon it by the trial court. It provides:

"In the event that it is impracticable to commence the supply of water by the 25th of April, 1918, then the lessees shall have the option of terminating this lease, and in the event that they exercise their option (within a reasonable time) of so terminating the lease, they shall serve written notice upon the lessor, notifying him of their election so to do. The lessor agrees thereupon (upon the service of such notice) to pay to the lessees the cost of the work already done by the lessees."

The language inserted by us in parenthesis in the above quotation seems to us to be the sense of the provision, and to warrant the interpretation placed by the trial court upon the instrument. Conceding that the plaintiffs had a reasonable time within which to exercise their option to terminate the lease and to give notice thereof, it would seem to follow that the word "thereupon" refers back to the time of service of such notice, and the words "work already done" refer to work done at the time of such notice and payment.

[6] Appellants urge that the evidence does not show a waiver of written notice of termination, and therefore the oral notification of June 4th was insufficient. Even though this be conceded, it would not avail appellants, for it was found that within four days thereafter plaintiff served upon defendants a written notice of termination, and it was found that this written notice was served within a reasonable time.

[7] The testimony in the record to which appellants object on the ground that it varied by parol a written agreement was not admitted for that purpose. It was admissible for other reasons. Some of it was directed to ascertaining what was a reasonable time for the exercise of the option, and inquiry which was proper because no time was specified for this act. A large part of such testimony was also admissible upon the question of whether or not the provision for written notice had been waived. The trial court found that it had been waived. Waiver may be shown by parol. Proof of express language is not necessary, but a waiver may be shown by circumstances or a course of acts or conduct. Knarston v. Man. L. Ins. Co., 124 Cal. 74, 56 Pac. 773; Frank & Co. v. New Amsterdam Co., 175 Cal. 293, 165 Pac. 927; Faris v. Amer. Natl. Ins. Co., 44 Cal. App. 48, 185 Pac. 1035. Appellants have discussed the evidence at some length in an effort to prove that a waiver was not shown. The question is a nice one, but is not decisive in the present case, nor necessary to be determined herein, for the reason that the plaintiffs' case does not rest, necessarily, upon a waiver of the written notice, it having been found, as hereinbefore stated, that the written notice was given four days after the oral one and within a reasonable time.

[8] Appellants' objection that the judgment should not include the price of the seed used on the land, but merely the actual cost of labor performed is without merit. The portion of the contract under which recovery was had is:

"The lessor agrees thereupon to pay to the lessees the cost of the work already done by the lessees, and in addition thereto ten per cent. of said cost, which the lessees agree to accept in full payment and satisfaction of all damages, demands and rights."

"The cost of the work," assuredly, includes the cost of all items which enter into such work. The board of the men doing the work, repairs to the machinery employed, are all items that enter into the cost of the work (Betts v. Orton, 34 Cal. App. 397, 167 Pac. 1147), and likewise, we think, the cost of the seed which was planted with the labor for which reimbursement was to be made.

The appellants' contention that the rent should not be included in the judgment under the provision for repayment of cost of work presents a close question. But before discussing that phase of the case, it seems pertinent to consider the validity of the entire clause upon which plaintiffs' recovery was based, because a considerable portion of the appellants' brief was devoted to that question.

[9] This action was brought to recover damages under the express provisions of the contract, by which the parties agreed that, in the event of a breach by the lessors of their covenant to furnish water in time, they would pay to the lessees the cost of the work already done by the lessees, and, in addition thereto, 10 per cent. of said cost, which the lessees agreed to accept in full payment and satisfaction of all damages, demands, and rights. Appellants urge that this provision of the contract does not fall within the exception created by section 1671 of the Civil Code, permitting the parties to a contract to agree therein upon an amount which shall be presumed to be the amount of damages sustained by a breach thereof when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damages; and that, even if it does fall within the exception above referred to, plaintiffs have not alleged or proved that the facts in this case were such as to bring the case within the operation of section 1671, Civil Code. Appellants, however, do concede that this provision of the contract is enforceable as an option given to the plaintiffs on the happening of a certain condition, namely, the failure of the defendants to furnish water within a specified time, and they cite cases as follows: Wilson v. Graham, 14 Tex. 222; 13 C. J. 608, § 640; Foxley v. Rich, 35 Utah, 162, 179, 99 Pac. 666; Jackson v. Beers, 14 Cal. 189, 193.

It seems immaterial, therefore, whether the provision be sustained as one for liquidated damages or as a provision granting to the plaintiffs an option. The provision is one that will be enforced by the courts, the plaintiffs have relied upon it, and have recovered thereunder.

[10] We shall now return to a consideration of appellants' contention that the amount of the rent paid by the lessees should not have been recovered by them. Examining the entire contract to ascertain the intention of the parties and the construction put upon the words "cost of the work" by them, we find in paragraph 12 of the lease a provision that in the event the lessor makes a sale of the land before the rice has been planted thereon and after the land has been prepared or partially prepared for planting, the lessor will pay to the lessees "the cost of the work" in preparing said land. Could it be seriously contended that it was the intention of the parties that upon a sale of the land the rent paid in advance should be retained by the lessors? Would not the words "cost of work" be given a sufficiently liberal construction to include the rent? We think so, and we can see no reason why the same broad construction should not be given to the same expression in paragraph 18 of the lease. That the lessees were to lose the rent paid in advance, notwithstanding the fact that the cost of the work, plus 10 per cent. was to be paid them upon breach of the contract by the lessor, is so unthinkable, unreasonable, unjust, and inequitable that no court would believe that such was the intent of the parties, and we are impelled to give the expression "cost of work" a meaning broad enough to include the rent.

It was said in Hayne v. San Francisco, 174 Cal. at page 189, 162 Pac. at page 627, in defining the phrase "cost and expenses," and considering allowances made to owners of abutting property for damages caused by the construction of a tunnel:

"We think the phrase should be given a broader meaning. The grant of power to cause the construction of the tunnel, of itself, implies a grant of sufficient incidental powers to accomplish that object. The Constitution (section 14, art. I) requires the payment of all damages to abutting owners before such tunnel can be constructed. The payment thereof would be one of the necessary expenses of accomplishing the result desired. It is true it would not be a part of the expense of actual construction. The right thus paid for would not technically be a part of the material for the construction of the tunnel, but it is none the less an expense essential to such construction. The making of plans and surveys which precede the construction creates no material which goes into the work, but the cost thereof is uniformly understood to be an expense of the work. We think the payment of damages made imperative by the Constitution is as much an expense or cost of the tunnel as the expense of preliminary surveys and plans, and that the charter gives the power to include it in the assessment."

So, in the instant case, before any work could be done upon the land, the rent was a necessary cost to the lessees, just as the preliminary surveys and plans for checking and leveling the land were necessary costs before a scraperful of dirt was moved. As was said in the case of Hayne v. San Francisco, supra:

"Each case must depend upon its own context and upon the object and purpose to be accomplished and the effect of the narrower or broader meaning upon such object, which considerations here point to the more liberal construction above stated."

[11] Appellants contend that the judgment violates the stipulation of the parties as to the cost of preparing the land. The agreed price of preparing the land was $13 an acre. There were 160 acres, making a total of $2,080. The rental paid was $960. These sums, plus 10 per cent., would make a possible total of $3,340. The judgment was for $4,000, an excess of $660, which is accounted for by the fact that the record contains testimony that after the rice was all planted (May 1, 1918), men were kept constantly upon the property until it was surrendered to defendant (about June 5, 1918) to be in readiness to receive the water should it be furnished as promised by the defendants. This was a necessary and proper expense in connection with the work of raising a crop. The plaintiff, Chanan Singh, testified that, after May 1st, he kept four men working on the land every day putting in water gates, building up and reinforcing the levees where they were weak and low, and similar work. For the services of these men, $5 a day each was charged, and the statement of expenses offered in evidence shows an item of $620 for the wages of these men in May, and $50 for the wages of two men for the first five days of June. As the trial court very pertinently remarked, it was reasonable and necessary for these men to be so employed while they were waiting from day to day to receive the water and apply it to the rice. This being true, it was proper for the plaintiffs to recover the amount expended for this service, and when allowance is made for this sum, it appears that the judgment is not excessive.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

60 Cal. App. 322

BABOO SINGH et al. v. CROSS et al.
(Civ. 4366.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 29, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 26, 1923.)

Landlord and tenant ⟸103(3)—Supply of part of water as agreed by landlord does not defeat tenants' right to surrender.

Where a lease covered 1,200 acres of land, which the tenants had sown to rice in accordance with their agreement, the fact that the landlords furnished water inadequately to irrigate about 250 acres, and that the tenants received and applied the water relying upon the landlords' promise from time to time that the rest would be furnished, does not defeat the right of the tenants to surrender the premises under the option given them by the lease for the landlords' failure to furnish water.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Baboo Singh and others against P. B. Cross and others, individually and as copartners under the firm name and style of the Provident Irrigation Syndicate. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Bacigalupi & Elkus, of San Francisco, and Frank Freeman, of Willows, for appellants.

Albert Jacoby, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal from a judgment for $16,000 against the defendants P. B. Cross, Joseph Carlson, Alden Anderson, and Howard M. Payne, in an action to recover damages alleged to have been caused to plaintiffs by reason of the breach by said defendants of an agreement for the leasing of a tract of land containing over 1,200 acres, in the county of Colusa, state of California.

The lease involved here is identical in many respects with the one considered by this court in the opinion filed this day in the case of Chanan Singh et al. v. Cross et al. (No. 4367) 212 Pac. 946; the points of difference between the two leases being that in the present case the lease was dated February 2d, while in the Chanan Singh Case it was dated April 5, 1918, and under the lease in the present case, water was to be supplied by defendants by April 15th, while in the Chanan Singh lease it was agreed that it should be supplied by April 25, 1918.

The evidence in the instant case is substantially the same in all essential particulars as that offered in the case of Chanan Singh et al. v. Cross et al., supra, and the findings in the two cases are substantially the same. Under such circumstances it is unnecessary to discuss again herein the matters determined by the opinion in the case of Chanan Singh et al. v. Cross et al., supra. As to all matters discussed therein that opinion is controlling here.

One point is urged by appellants in the present case which was not presented in the Chanan Singh Case. It is that about May 11, 1918, plaintiffs received water enough to irrigate a part of their land, and applied such water and attempted to irrigate a portion of the land. The trial court found that the "defendants failed and neglected to furnish to and upon said lands and premises a sufficient, adequate or any quantity of water for the purpose of irrigating said lands and premises as aforesaid, or at all, except an amount or quantity to partially and inefficiently and inadequately supply about 250 acres of said premises." Defendants' obligation was to "furnish water * * * in an amount usual in said locality for maturing rice that may then be planted upon said premises." The plaintiffs had 1,200 acres planted, according to the testimony of Baboo Singh and the findings of the court. Defendants did not fulfill their contract by supplying an amount of water inadequate to irrigate one-fifth of that area. The fact that plaintiffs applied the water they received cannot militate against their rights. As in the case of Chanan Singh et al. v. Cross, the defendants promised the plaintiffs from time to time that water would be supplied and the plaintiffs, apparently in good faith, delayed exercising their option and continued to apply their labor to the land in the hope that defendants would meet their obligations.

As to the contention of appellants that the judgment violates the stipulation of the parties as to the cost of preparing the land for rice, it is only necessary to point out that the plaintiff testified that 1,250 acres of land had been so prepared. It was stipulated that the cost of preparing the land and supplying the seed would be $13 per acre. At this stipulated figure the cost of preparation of the land would be $16,250. The contract provided for an additional 10 per cent. upon this amount, making a possible total of $17,875. The judgment of the court is within this amount, being for $16,000.

There are no other matters urged by appellants which are not covered by the opinion in the case of Chanan Singh et al. v. Cross et al., supra.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

60 Cal. App. 324

HERNAM SINGH et al. v. CROSS et al.
(Civ. 4368, S. F. 10039.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 29, 1922. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 28, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⟹1152, 1170(12)—Judgment for deceased plaintiff not reversible error, and may be amended on appeal.

In an action by several partners, one of whom died before trial and before the judgment was rendered, the fact that the judgment was subsequently rendered in favor of that deceased partner without the substitution of his executors for him does not render the judgment void, but the mistake is capable of correction, and does not require a reversal under Code Civ. Proc. § 475.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

2. Abatement and revival ⟹71—Judgment for partners, rendered after death of one without substituting his representatives, need not be reversed.

In an action by partners, judgment for the original plaintiffs, rendered after the death of one of the partners without substitution of the personal representatives of that partner, need not be reversed, in view of the fact that the surviving partners were entitled to settle up the affairs of the copartnership under Code Civ. Proc. § 1585.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Hernam Singh and others against P. B. Cross and others, individually and as copartners under the firm name and style of the Provident Irrigation Syndicate. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Bacigalupi & Elkus, of San Francisco, and Frank Freeman, of Willows, for appellants.

Albert Jacoby, of San Francisco, for respondents.

LANGDON, P. J. This appeal by the defendants from a judgment against them for $9,000 involves the same matters argued by appellants in the cases of Chanan Singh et al. v. Cross et al. (No. 4367) 212 Pac. 946, and Baboo Singh et al. v. Cross et al. (No. 4366), 212 Pac. 951, and considered by this court in opinions filed in said cases this day. The lease involved in the instant case is substantially the same, and the evidence is substantially the same as in the two cases mentioned, and the reasoning of said cases is applicable here.

The one additional point made in the present case is the objection that the judgment should not have run in favor of the plaintiff Jawala Singh, because of this death subsequent to the commencement of the action.

The action was commenced in August, 1918. In October, 1918, Jawala Singh died. Suggestion of said death was made in open court, and counsel stated that the administrator of the estate of deceased would be substituted. No substitution appears to have been made, however, and on August 10, 1920, judgment was entered for the plaintiffs, including Jawala Singh.

Subsequently, and on September 30, 1921, it appears from the statement of counsel, an order of substitution was made, but such order is not a part of the record presented to us. However, while the case was pending before this court, an order was duly and regularly made by this court and filed herein, substituting for the plaintiff and respondent Jawala Singh, D. C. Tucker, the administrator of his estate.

[1] The case of Sanborn v. Cunningham, 4 Cal. Unrep. 95, 33 Pac. 894, appears to be in point here. There, as in the present case, the plaintiffs were partners, and one of them died before judgment was entered. Through inadvertence, the judgment was entered in the name of deceased, instead of in the name of his executors. It was said:

"The verdict and judgment were entitled 'Charles Ford, A. A. Morey and J. S. Menasco, partners trading under the firm name of Charles Ford & Co.' as the plaintiffs, overlooking the change made by the death of Ford, and the substitution of his executors, which had been made by order of court. It is contended by appellants that the verdict and judgment are void for this reason. The mistake is capable of correction, and does not require a reversal of the judgment. Code Civ. Proc. § 475."

As in the two companion cases mentioned, appellants contend that the judgment is excessive. The amount of land involved is 493 acres. At the stipulated cost of $13 an acre for preparing and seeding the land, the cost of preparation would be $6,409, which, together with the rental paid of $2,975 and the 10 per cent. allowed by the contract, would warrant a judgment in excess of the amount of the present judgment, which was for $9,000.

The judgment is amended by substituting for the plaintiff Jawala Singh, D. C. Tucker, administrator of the estate of Jawala Singh, deceased, and as so amended it is affirmed.

We concur: NOURSE, J.; STURTEVANT, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [2] In the application for transfer to this court, no complaint is made of the decision with reference to the effect of the death of one of the partners before judgment. Nevertheless, we deem it proper, in denying the petition for rehearing, to call attention to the fact that the surviving partners were entitled to settle up the affairs of the copartnership. C. C. P. § 1585.

The petition is denied.

All concur.

---

60 Cal. App. 395

CITY OF SOUTH SAN FRANCISCO v. SANTA CLARA VALLEY LAND CO. et al.
(Civ. 4407; S. F. 10174.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 9, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 8, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⊂=544(2)—Appeal on judgment roll held to attack only sufficiency of complaint or findings.

A contention, on appeal on the judgment roll alone from a judgment foreclosing a street improvement lien, that the board of trustees had acquired no jurisdiction to order the improvement, must be predicated either upon the insufficiency of the complaint to state facts essential to confer jurisdiction upon the board, or of the findings to support the averments of the complaint and to sustain the judgment.

2. Municipal corporations ⊂=567(1)—Complaint to foreclose lien for street improvements held sufficient.

A complaint to foreclose a street improvement lien, which complies with the requirements of Street Improvement Act 1911, as amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1469) § 27, that in such complaint it is sufficient to allege briefly that the city council ordered the work, the performance of the work under the contract, the making of the assessment, the issuing of the warrant and certificate, and the making of the diagram, the assessment against the particular parcel owned by defendant, and refusal of defendant to pay on demand, and which in addition alleged that a board of trustees duly adopted the resolution of intention, and each and every other of the several orders and proceedings in the making of the improvement and the creating of the liens, so as to comply with the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 456, the relation to the pleading of determinations of boards and officers was sufficient to sustain the judgment foreclosing the lien.

3. Appeal and error ⊂=907(3)—Evidence presumed to sustain complaint on defendants' appeal on judgment roll.

Where the appeal from a judgment foreclosing a street improvement lien was taken on the judgment roll alone, the presumption is that the allegations of the complaint were sustained by evidence showing the facts which conferred jurisdiction upon the board of trustees to make the improvement and to create the liens therefor.

4. Municipal corporations ⊂=569—Findings held to sustain judgment foreclosing street improvement lien.

Where the complaint for foreclosure of a street improvement lien was sufficient under the Street Improvement Act of 1911, as amended in 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1469, § 27), and also under Code Civ. Proc. § 456, findings of fact which followed the material averments of the complaint are sufficient.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by City of South San Francisco against the Santa Clara Valley Land Company and another to foreclose street assessment liens. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

McKannay & Hunt, of San Francisco, for appellants.

J. W. Coleberd, of South San Francisco, for respondent.

Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe and Charles W. Cobb, all of San Francisco, amici curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff for the foreclosure of certain street assessment liens upon the properties of the defendant, Santa Clara Valley Land Company, situate within the corporate limits of the city of South San Francisco. The complaint alleges the corporate character of the parties to the action; alleges the due adoption on May 1, 1916, by the board of trustees of said city of a resolution of intention to order certain improvement work to be done upon and along the streets of said city, describing in detail said work; alleges that on May 29, 1916, the said board of trustees by resolution duly made and adopted ordered said work to be done; alleges that in said resolution of intention, in the notices of passage thereof, in the resolution ordering said work, in the notice inviting sealed bids for the performance of said work, in the resolution awarding the contract therefor, in the notice of the award of said contract, in the warrant issued to the contractors, and in the notice of filing of the list of unpaid assessments, there was inserted the notice required by the Improvement Act of 1915 (St. 1915, p. 1464) with relation to serial bonds. The complaint further specifically alleges the award of the contract to the contractors and the full performance by them of the same; the filing of the diagram of the property affected; the approval of said diagram by the board of trustees and the record thereof; the making of the assessment by the superintendent of streets and the due recordation thereof, and the issuance of the warrant to the contractors; the making and levying of the assessments and the due demand for their payment; the return of the warrants showing such demand duly verified; the filing of the list of unpaid assessments and the due posting and publication of the notice of such filing; the resolution of the board of trustees determining the amounts unpaid upon said assessments and ordering the issuance of the serial bonds therefor; the resolution awarding and issuing said serial bonds to those entitled to the same; the fact that on January 5, 1920, a certain installment of said assessments became due and payable and were unpaid, with the interest and penalties thereon; the due adoption of the resolution and the foreclosure of the liens of said assessments upon the properties of said defendant affected thereby; the prayer for the foreclosure of said liens.

The defendants did not demur to this complaint, but filed their answer wherein the taking of the several steps in the course of making said improvement and of the levy of the assessments therefor as alleged in said complaint was admitted, the defendants' only denials having reference to the sufficiency of said proceedings to operate in the creation of said liens or of any liability on the part of said defendants arising out of the making and completion of said improvements. The cause was submitted to the court sitting without a jury upon a stipulation of the parties as to the facts, whereupon the court made and filed its findings of fact and conclusions of law finding specifically that the foregoing averments of the complaint were true, and further finding as conclusions of law therefrom that the said installments upon said assessments were due, payable, and unpaid, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a foreclosure of the lien thereof. The judgment followed, from which this appeal has been taken, and the cause is presented upon appeal upon the judgment roll alone.

[1, 2] The sole contention of appellants here is that the board of trustees of said city never acquired jurisdiction to proceed with said improvements, for the reason that the resolution of intention of the board of trustees of said city to order such improvement was never published, nor were the notices of said improvement posted along the line of the contemplated work of such improvement, as required by the statutes of 1911 as amended in 1915, under which said improvement was undertaken to be made. In view of the fact that this appeal is presented upon the judgment roll alone, the foregoing contention on the part of the appellants must be predicated either upon the insufficiency of the complaint in stating the essential facts necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the municipal body to make such improvement, or of the findings to support the averments of said complaint and to sustain said judgment. There is no merit in either of these contentions. The Street Improvement Act of 1911 (St. 1911, p. 730), as amended in 1915 (St. 1915, pp. 1469, 1470), under which the proceedings for the improvement in question were undertaken, provides in section 27 thereof for the institution of actions for the foreclosure of the liens arising in the course of making said improvements, and in so doing proceeds to specify the essential allegations of the complaint in such foreclosure proceedings as follows:

"In a complaint in any such action it shall be held sufficient to allege briefly that the city council ordered the work, the performance of the work under the contract, the making of the assessment, the issuing of said warrant and certificate and the making of said diagram; that an assessment (naming the amount) was levied against that certain lot or parcel of land (describing the same), which, according to the information and belief of the plaintiff, is owned by the defendant; that payment of said assessment has been demanded in the time, form and manner prescribed in this act and that the same has not been paid."

[3] The complaint in question here complies with the requirements of the foregoing provision of the statute. It moreover alleges that the board of trustees of said city duly made and adopted the resolution of intention and each and every other of the several orders and proceedings of the said board in the course of making said improvement and creating said liens. It thus complied with the requirements of section 456 of the Code of Civil Procedure with relation to the pleading of judgments or other determinations of courts, boards, and officers. The allegations of the complaint in these regards were not controverted by the defendants in their answers, but had they been so the presumption upon this appeal would be that the facts conferring jurisdiction upon the board to make such improvements and to create the liens therefor sought to be foreclosed herein were fully proven, since this appeal is upon the judgment roll alone. The authorities are ample and uniform upholding the sufficiency of a complaint in the form of that assailed upon this appeal. Himmelman v. Danos, 35 Cal. 441; Pacific Paving Co. v. Bolton, 97 Cal. 8, 31 Pac. 625; Locke v. Cowan, 34 Cal. App. 581, 168 Pac. 387; Bienfield v. Van Ness, 176 Cal. 585, 169 Pac. 225; Los Angeles Paving Co. v. Los Angeles Foundry Co., 181 Cal. 685, 186 Pac. 593. The cases cited by appellants in support of their said contention have no application to the matter of pleading, which is the only matter here under consideration, but refer to the sufficiency of the proof of the jurisdictional facts in cases of this character, which is not at all involved in this appeal.

[4] As to the appellants' contention that the findings are insufficient to support the judgment, it is sufficient to state that the findings follow the material averments of the complaint. The stipulation of the parties as to the facts is not embodied in the transcript, but since the cause was submitted upon such stipulation it is fair to assume that the findings are in the language of such stipulation, and, if so, it follows that the parties have stipulated that every order of the board of trustees during the course of said improvement and of the creation of the assessment liens for the cost thereof was duly given, made and adopted; and it thence further follows that every act and thing required by the statute to be done and performed in order to give the board jurisdiction to make said orders was duly and regularly done and performed.

The final contention of the appellants, that the provision of the improvement act in question permitting simplified pleadings in actions of this character is unconstitutional, does not rise to the dignity of requiring refutation.

We find no merit in this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

I concur: TYLER, P. J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for transfer addressed to this court is directed solely to the proposition that section 27 of the Street Improvement Act of 1911 (amended Stats. 1915, p. 1469–70) with reference to the form of complaint in an action of foreclosure of a street lien is unconstitutional because in violation of Const. art. 4, § 25, subd. 3 and subd. 33. This point is not necessary to the decision of the District Court of Appeal, and we withhold approval of the concluding paragraph of the opinion.

Petition denied.

WILBUR, C. J., and KERRIGAN, LENNON, MYERS, LAWLOR, and WASTE, JJ., concur.

---

60 Cal. App. 414

SINGER v. BRUNS et al. (Civ. 4401.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 11, 1923.)

Municipal corporations ⇐706(6)—Negligence of motorman and truck driver sued by street car passenger held question of fact.

In an action for damages by a street car passenger against the driver of a truck struck by the street car, evidence that the motorman upon approaching a crossing saw an automobile coming from one side and slowed down to let it pass in front of him, but, upon seeing it turn to the side unexpectedly without crossing, started his car suddenly and ran into a truck crossing from the opposite direction, held, that the question of defendant's negligence and the question whether the motorman by stopping his car led defendants to believe he would await their crossing, and whether a sudden speeding up of his car was negligence, were questions of fact, the determination of which by the trial court sitting without a jury was not reversible.

---

⇐For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; A. F. St. Sure, Judge.

Action by Kate Singer against J. H. Bruns, Elwyn Bruns, and another. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. S. Henion and Ostrander & Carey, all of Oakland, for appellant.

Louis V. Crowley and Cooley, Crowley & Lachmund, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal on behalf of the plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendants J. H. Bruns and Elwyn Bruns in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in a collision between a street car of the defendant San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways, upon which the plaintiff was a passenger, and an auto truck being driven by the defendant Elwyn Bruns. After the commencement of the action, but before the trial thereof, it was upon the plaintiff's motion dismissed as to the defendant San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways, but was continued and tried as against the defendants Bruns before the court sitting without a jury. Upon the submission of the cause the trial court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law, wherein and whereby it found that the collision occurred by reason of the careless and negligent manner in which the street car was operated by the employees of the San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways; and that it was untrue that the defendants Bruns, or either of them, were careless or negligent in the operation of their said auto truck, but on the contrary it was true that the said defendants Bruns were operating and driving the same in a careful and prudent manner at the time of said collision. As a conclusion of law from the foregoing findings of fact the court found that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover as against the defendants Bruns and gave its judgment accordingly in favor of said defendants. The plaintiff prosecutes this appeal from said judgment.

The evidence with respect to the circumstances under which the collision in question occurred is quite conflicting, and it would serve no useful purpose to restate such evidence with a view merely to disclosing the particulars in which such conflict exists. It will be sufficient to state that there was substantial evidence presented to the trial court showing that the collision in question occurred on the 6th day of March, 1920, at the intersection of Fallon and Eighth streets in the city of Oakland. The San Francisco-Oakland Terminal Railways, a corporation, was at the time operating an east-bound street car on and along the southerly track of its system on Eighth street, and the plaintiff was a passenger upon said car. The defendants Bruns, Elwyn Bruns driving, were operating an automobile truck on Fallon street, going in a northerly direction at or near the point of said intersection. The speed of said truck was by a governor limited to 13 miles an hour. It was heavily laden and was proceeding at the time at about the speed of 7 miles an hour. As the truck approached Eighth street and as the car going easterly on Eighth street drew near the intersection of the two streets, a lighter truck, traveling faster, came into view on Fallon street, moving southerly toward Eighth as though to cross the street in front of the car. The motorman on the car was watching this south-bound automobile and, apparently thinking it was about to cross Eighth street in front of his car, brought it almost, if not entirely, to a stop. The south-bound automobile did not cross Eighth street, but suddenly swerved to the west and turned into Eighth street. The defendant Elwyn Bruns seeing the street car coming, apparently, to a standstill, continued on his way across Eighth street, but when almost upon the tracks observed that the motorman on the car, who had been watching the movements of the lighter automobile and was not, apparently, observing the movement of the auto truck or its advance across the street, suddenly caused the car to pick up speed. The driver of the auto truck, seeing this unexpected action on the part of the car, endeavored to avoid a collision by turning sharply to the right; but the car struck the auto truck on its left side and by the impact the plaintiff sustained her injuries. From these facts there is substantial evidence to sustain the trial court's finding that the agents of the railway corporation in charge of the car were negligent and that the defendants Bruns were not. This case requires no elaborate discussion of the principles of law involved, since the question of negligence was, upon the disputed evidence in the case, a question of fact and not a question of law. Whether the defendants Bruns were entitled, under the circumstances of the instant situation, to believe that the car of the railway corporation had come or was about to come to a standstill in order to allow the two vehicles, which were traveling in opposite directions on Fallon street and were each approaching the track, to cross before the car proceeded on its way, was a question of fact for the trial court to determine, and with that determination we cannot interfere. Whether or not the motorman upon the car had, by his conduct in bringing his car practically to a standstill, led the defendants Bruns to a reasonable belief that he would await their crossing in front of his car, and whether or not his conduct in speeding up his car while they were thus proceeding was or was not negligence on his part, were also, in view of the conflicting evidence in the case, questions of fact which it was the sole function of the trial court to determine. The cases cited by the appellant have no application to such a disputed state of facts as is presented in this record, and it is not, therefore, necessary to review them in detail. We find no reason for disturbing the findings and conclusions of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: TYLER, P. J.

---

60 Cal. App. 439

PEOPLE ex rel. CLARK v. MILK PRODUCERS' ASS'N OF CENTRAL CALIFORNIA, Inc. (Civ. 2514.)

(District Court of Appeals, Third District, California. Jan. 12, 1923.)

1. Appeal and error ⟸917(1)—Complaint on appeal, after sustaining demurrer, must be taken as true.

Allegations of the complaint must be taken as true on an appeal, after demurrer has been sustained.

2. Monopolies ⟸26(1)—Quo warranto ⟸19—When will lie against corporation.

Where a corporation usurps powers which its articles of incorporation and the law do not permit it to exercise, and violates the statute defining and prohibiting certain trusts in restraint of trade, quo warranto proceedings will lie.

3. Quo warranto ⟸34—Cannot be instituted or controlled by individual; intervention by individual permissible.

A suit in quo warranto cannot be filed or the people's interest therein controlled, by an individual, though, if such a suit is once instituted, intervention by a private person in certain cases is permissible.

4. Quo warranto ⟸34—Held properly instituted by state, notwithstanding relator was private individual.

Quo warranto proceedings against corporation, instituted under Civ. Code, § 653z, which provides, "The right of a corporation * * * to continue its business may be inquired into by quo warranto proceedings at the suit of the Attorney General, but not otherwise," wherein the complaint recited that the people, on the information and complaint of the relator, complained and alleged, and which stated the relator was a citizen, a resident, a taxpayer, and affected by defendant's practices, as a result of which she had suffered a pecuniary loss, held properly instituted by the state, notwithstanding the relator was private individual.

5. Quo warranto ⟸44—Attorney General has some discretion in passing on complaints of public wrong before commencing quo warranto proceedings.

The Attorney General has some discretion in passing on complaints of public wrong, and ought not to bring quo warranto proceedings, where the reasons therefor are trivial or to repress some private wrong.

6. Quo warranto ⟸1—When proceeding commenced becomes public action, whether on evidence furnished Attorney General by others or obtained by his own inquiry.

When a quo warranto proceeding has been commenced, it must be regarded as a public action, regardless of whether the information on which the Attorney General proceeded was furnished him by others or obtained by his own inquiry.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Quo warranto proceedings by the People, on the relation of Carrie A. Clark, against the Milk Producers' Association of Central California, Inc. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Leon French, Deputy Atty. Gen. (John W. Preston, Hartley F. Peart, and Albert H. Elliot, all of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Peck, Bunker & Cole, Archibald M. Johnson, and A. A. De Ligne, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

ANDERSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment dismissing an action after demurrer sustained to the complaint, sustained without leave to amend. The demurrer was both general and special. With it was submitted a motion to strike out, which was granted by the trial court upon the same theory upon which it sustained the demurrer. Appellant urges that the court erred in granting the motion to strike out and in sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend.

The action is in quo warranto, directed against defendant, Milk Producers' Association of Central California. Defendant, as disclosed by the complaint, is a nonprofit co-operative corporation, organized under sections 653b to 653zb of the Civil Code. The complaint was upon the relation of Carrie A. Clark, a private party. Respondent's brief concedes that, if the complaint could have been filed upon the relation of a private party, there is a statement therein of a cause of action capable of amendment, and that the motion to strike out should have been denied, and that leave to amend should have been granted. The motion to strike out was directed to all those parts of the complaint which showed the action was instituted upon information and complaint of the relator, Carrie A. Clark.

The main theory of the demurrer was that the complaint stated no cause of action, because of the averments showing that it was filed upon the relation of a private party. The trial court struck out all portions of the complaint which showed the connection of Carrie A. Clark with the action. It ruled that, under the statute particularly applicable to corporations of the character of defendant, the action could not be instituted or maintained, except at the instance of the Attorney General, acting without a relator, and, as the complaint showed the action was upon the relation of a private party, the complaint was not capable of amendment, and that the action should be dismissed.

[1, 2] The theory of the complaint, as shown by its allegations (which, for the purposes of this appeal, must be taken as true under the general rule applicable to demurrers to complaints), is that the defendant corporation has abused its corporate franchise, has usurped, and is now usurping, important powers which its articles of incorporation and the law do not permit it to exercise, and has violated and is now violating the statute defining and prohibiting certain trusts in restraint of trade. Quo warranto, of course, lies in such cases. People v. Merchants' Protective Corporation (Cal. Sup.) 209 Pac. 3630.

[3] The complaint does not in any way show that the relator is the true plaintiff. Our law, differing from that of some other states, does not permit a suit in quo warranto to be filed by a private individual, or, so far as the interests of the people are concerned, to be controlled by a private individual. If the suit is once instituted an intervention by a private person is evidently under certain conditions permissible. People v. Campbell, 138 Cal. 11, 70 Pac. 918. But, notwithstanding there is a relator, the action is by the people. People v. Reclamation District No. 108, 169 Cal. 786, 147 Pac. 1176.

[4] The complaint in this case designates the people as the plaintiff; it is the people who complain; the wrongs complained of are of public concern; the prayer is that defendant be excluded from all the corporate right, that it be dissolved, and that its franchise be revoked and canceled. The only connection of the relator with the case is shown by the opening of the complaint, in which it is recited that the people, upon information and complaint of relator, do complain and allege, and by the statements, in paragraph VI of the complaint, that relator is a citizen, a resident, a taxpayer, and one of the consuming public affected by defendant's practices, and that as a result she has suffered a pecuniary loss, the amount of which is not stated.

Counsel for respondent do not dispute the appropriateness of the statement in paragraph 1835 of Spelling on Injunction (2d Ed.), reading as follows:

"The authorities are somewhat conflicting as to the right and proper functions of relators, but the better practice and that prevailing in most of the states is that the relators perform no different or more important office in any case than that of an informer or prosecuting witness in an ordinary criminal or penal action, and that the state's attorney has full power of control over the prosecution, both as to instituting it and conducting it."

The addition of the relator's name to the complaint did not make this a private action. This, we think, is clearly stated by our Supreme Court, as follows:

"The proceeding is by information by the Attorney General. When the proceeding is in the interest of private persons, in whole or in part, they are said to be by relation, and under the provisions of the Code the relator may be required to give security for costs. The information, however (that is, the complaint), is signed and filed by the Attorney General as attorney, and doubtless as attorney he has control of the action. I know of no such distinction as that made by counsel and attributed to the late Attorney General. If the proceeding is one in which a private person can have no interest, the proceeding is not properly by relation. But the Attorney General had the power to institute the proceeding, and in either form it is by him. If unnecessarily he has added that it is by relation of a named person, that does no harm. It does not convert the proceeding into a private action." People v. Sutter Street Railway Co., 117 Cal. at page 612, 49 Pac. 737.

The motion to strike out was granted, and the demurrer sustained, and the action dismissed because of the provisions of section 653z of the Civil Code, reading as follows:

"The right of a corporation, claiming to be organized and incorporated and carrying on its business under this title, to do and to continue its business, may be inquired into by quo warranto proceedings at the suit of the Attorney General, but not otherwise."

But for all practical purposes this suit is the suit of the Attorney General. This is clearly so of every case in quo warranto, where the grievance is public, or public as well as private. It certainly is a matter of public concern that a corporation, under the color or guise of a nonprofit concern, is usurping the functions of an ordinary corporation by employing its capital to engage in business for a profit, and is combining with others in the illegal restraint of trade. Such a corporation is not only usurping a franchise in violation of the quasi contract from which it derives its power from the state, but, in violating the law, it is exercising a power which the state denies to all persons. The illegal practices complained of are by the complaint made a feature of the business conducted for a profit—a kind of business which defendant has no right to engage in.

It is not questioned but that the complaint contains accusations of the kind referred to. The learned judge of the trial court, in his opinion which is made a part of the printed record on appeal, specifically refrains from ruling that the complaint would have been incapable of amendment had it originated altogether with the Attorney General, and, as hereinbefore indicated, respondent's brief concedes that the dismissal was erroneous, if the fact that it was upon the relation of a private individual did not make it totally null.

To hold that such a complaint as was filed in this case should, in effect be stricken from the files, because it appears that the arm of the law moved as a result of information obtained, or partly obtained, from a private person, would be to regard form more highly than substance. If the argument were sound, then in all fairness to the defendant he ought, if the action disclosed the name of no relator, be permitted to make inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining whether the action was not really instigated by a complaint of a private person addressed to the Attorney General. In substance there would be no difference between the assumed situation and the one here presented.

[5, 6] We think that, as has been indicated in some of the cases, the Attorney General has some discretion in passing upon complaints of public wrong (Lamb v. Webb, 151 Cal. 451, 91 Pac. 102, 646); that he ought not to sue where the reasons urged for the beginning of an action in quo warranto are trivial, or the purpose is to redress some grievance which is altogether private; but that when, upon due consideration of substantial evidence before him, whether furnished by others or obtained by his own inquiry, he has filed a complaint in quo warranto over his own signature, the action thereby begun is, in this state, to be regarded as a public action, prosecuted by the Attorney General, for the people. The presumption was that official duty was performed in the filing of the complaint in this case. The complaint presented, and not the personal element involved in its filing, is the important thing.

We do not think that the words "and not otherwise," contained in the Code section, were intended to get apart and distinguish the suit referred to as something materially different from what the law had known. The language used was like language used in other laws—and in the decided cases merely to emphasize the point that collateral inquiry may not be made in private suits as to whether a corporation has violated its franchise in performing a particular act. The prohibition is added that the right of corporations, such as the defendant, to continue to do business may not be inquired into, except by a quo warranto proceeding at the suit of the Attorney General and not otherwise. The entire statement as to the remedies is really nothing more than statutory declaration of the public nature of the quo warranto proceeding referred to. The words "and not otherwise" add emphasis to what was in reality already expressed, but this is the ordinary phraseology used for such purpose. The words do not, with any considerable degree of clearness, reflect the idea that a quo warranto proceeding, which is very public in its nature, should fail because the people's complaint reveals a relator.

We think that the rulings of the trial court were erroneous, and that the judgment should be reversed.

It is so ordered.

We concur: FINCH, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

---

60 Cal. App. 401

RICHARDSON v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. et al.
(Civ. 4395.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 10, 1923. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 8, 1923.)

Master and servant ⟸288(13)—Assumption of risk by lineman injured by breaking of telegraph pole held question for jury.

Where plaintiff, an experienced telegraph lineman, ordered to ascend a pole, called his foreman's attention to surface rot at the foot of the pole, but the foreman assured him that the pole was all right, and plaintiff was injured by the breaking of the pole because of rot at its core, held, that plaintiff had not assumed the risk as a matter of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, Napa County; Henry C. Gesford, Judge.

Action by W. E. Richardson against the Southern Pacific Company and Walker D. Hines, Agent, United States Railroad Administration, to recover for personal injuries. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant Agent appeals. Affirmed.

W. I. Gilbert, of Los Angeles, R. G. Hildebrand, and W. V. Herrin, both of San Francisco, and L. E. Johnston, and H. L. Johnston, both of Napa, for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiff, a lineman of the Southern Pacific Company, while the railroad of such corporation was being operated under the direction and control of the Director General of railroads of the United States. Subsequent to the inception of the action it was dismissed as to the Southern Pacific Company, but continued as against the Director General. The facts of the case are practically undisputed, and are briefly as follows:

In the early part of February, 1918, the plaintiff, who was an experienced lineman, entered the employ of the railroad corporation in that capacity. On February 6, 1918, he was ordered by the foreman of the division to which he had been assigned to accompany him, with certain other members of the crew, to Rutherford, Napa county. Prior to going to Rutherford the foreman had received from the superintendent's office written instructions concerning the work to be done there, which instructions, accompanied by a blueprint, directed the removal of three certain poles from the place where they had been standing to a nearby new location, as shown upon said blueprint. These instructions contained the history of the poles, and the foreman understood at the time he received such instructions that the engineering department of the corporation had preceded himself and his crew a few days before to said place to lay out the work to be done there. The foreman also knew that the corporation maintained a system of inspection of poles under which, from time to time, the poles along its railroad lines were gone over for the purpose of determining whether they were sound or unsound, and that poles thus inspected and found to be unsound were marked by the making of a cross upon them, indicating their unsoundness. The poles in question here contained no such marking. The plaintiff was not informed as to these facts or as to the contents of the instructions which the foreman had received, nor was he or the fellow employees of his crew, other than the foreman, advised as to the character of the work to be done at the point indicated prior to their arrival there. Upon reaching the scene the foreman informed them that one corner pole and certain others near the railroad station were to be removed and set back a short distance, and that the work was to be done without interfering with the wires or telegraph service. Upon being so informed the plaintiff suggested to the foreman that "We ought to have our pike poles along," to which the foreman replied, "We have not got them; we will have to set them up without pike poles." He then directed the plaintiff to make a hole at the side of the corner pole, which was the first to be removed, while the foreman and other linemen were engaged digging a hole a few feet away in which to reset said pole. The plaintiff dug a hole alongside of said pole about 1½ or two feet deep, and while doing so noticed that there appeared to be some ground rot affecting the surface of the pole where it appeared to have been underground, to which he called the foreman's attention, who came over, and, using a bar or shovel, scraped the ground rot down from the post to determine whether it affected the interior of the pole. Finding, apparently, that it was a surface rot, the foreman told the plaintiff that the pole was all right, and ordered him to get his belt lines and tools and go up the pole and untie the wires so that the pole could be removed. This was the first information that the plaintiff had that he was expected to climb the pole, but he then proceeded to procure his equipment and ascend the pole. Having released one of the wires from the pole the plaintiff suggested to the foreman that a temporary guy wire be run to help support and steady the pole when the remaining wire should be released. This met with the foreman's approval, and such wire was run according to the plaintiff's suggestion. He then released the remaining wire, when the pole broke, precipitating him to the ground, whereby he sustained the injuries complained of in this action. The pole was found to be internally in a rotten and decayed condition, to which condition its breakage and fall was due.

The plaintiff in his complaint herein alleged that the said pole which he was required to ascend was rotten, unsound, and defective, which condition was unknown to plaintiff, but was known to his employer, or could have been discovered and known by it through the exercise of ordinary care and vigilance, and that his fall and injuries were caused by the said rotten, unsound, and defective condition of said pole. The answer of the defendant puts in issue the main allegations of the plaintiff's complaint regarding the unsound condition of said pole or that the defendant knew or ought reasonably to have known the same, or that the plaintiff's fall and injuries were the result of any negligence on the part of the defendant in that regard.

By way of separate answer and defense the defendant averred that the plaintiff was at the time he ascended said pole an experienced lineman, and that the injuries, if any, sustained by him arose from the risks incident to the employment in which he was engaged; that the plaintiff knew, or by the exercise of ordinary care on his part should have known, of whatever danger there was incident to his work on and around said pole, and that said pole was likely to or might fall with him, when he ascended the same, and that he then and there assumed the risk of being injured in and about said work, and that any injuries sustained by him arose from his assumption of said risk, and were not due to any negligence on the part of his said employer.

The cause was tried before a jury. At the close of the plaintiff's case the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which the trial court denied. A motion for a directed verdict in the defendant's favor was also denied. At the conclusion of the evidence, and in the course of the submission of the cause to the jury, the defendant requested certain instructions reflecting their theory of the law of the case, which the court refused to give other than in a modified form. The defendant assigns error on the part of the trial court in its refusal to give and its modification of said instructions, but offers neither argument nor authority in favor of said assignment of error except as the same may be embraced in the discussion of the question of the plaintiff's assumption of risk. The case upon appeal may therefore be considered in the single aspect as to whether, under all the circumstances of the case as above briefly set forth, the plaintiff can be held as a matter of law to have assumed the risk of the unsoundness and possible fall of the pole when he ascended it, as a risk which was incident to his employment. If so, the defendant's motion for a nonsuit should have been sustained, and the motion for a directed verdict granted; if not, if the question of the plaintiff's assumption of risk was, under all of the circumstances of the case, proper to be submitted to the jury, then the verdict of the jury and judgment based thereon should be sustained.

We are satisfied that the authorities do not support the appellant's contention that the plaintiff, under the circumstances of this case as above set forth, should be held as a matter of law to have assumed the risk of the pole in question breaking, and of his consequent fall and injury, so as to prevent any recovery on his part in this case. The plaintiff, while an experienced lineman, was an employee of the corporation, acting under the authority and direction of a foreman in the doing of whatever work he was assigned to do. He had no previous knowledge of the location or character of the particular work to be done at Rutherford prior to his arrival on the scene. He had, therefore, no knowledge of any unsoundness of the pole or poles to be removed and to be reset there. Upon being informed by his foreman as to the nature of the work then immediately to be done, he had the right to assume that the poles to be removed and reset were sound, otherwise they would not have been suitable for use in the new location. Being under the direction of a foreman, he had a right to rely upon the performance by his employer and by his foreman of the duty resting upon his employer, whom the foreman there immediately represented, of supplying reasonably safe appliances and a reasonably safe place to work. There is nothing in the evidence herein or in the experience of this particular foreman to indicate that poles of the character of those in question here are dangerous for linemen to ascend if sound, or that this plaintiff in ascending said pole under the existing circumstances, would have been in any danger if said pole had been sound. The work which the plaintiff was directed to do at the base of said pole revealed certain signs of ground rot, which seemed to be external, but which the plaintiff called the foreman's attention to for his investigation and determination as to the effect of this external ground rot upon the soundness of the pole. This episode revealed the precise legal relation between the plaintiff as lineman and his foreman in charge of the work. The foreman had a right to rely, and apparently did rely, upon the latter to investigate and determine every fact essential to the provision of a safe place for him to work, and the foreman recognized and undertook to perform this duty in his investigation of the ground rot to which his attention had thus been directed, declaring after such investigation "the pole was all right." Other than this superficial defect there was nothing about said pole to indicate that it was rotten at the core. The defect to which its later fall and plaintiff's injuries were due was not an obvious defect, and we are aware of no rule of law which requires an employee, in the absence of any knowledge as to latent defects or of any facts which would reasonably put him upon inquiry, to conduct an investigation on his own account as to the existence of latent defects in the place or appliances which have been provided by his employer for the doing of his assigned work. The rule upon this general subject was well stated by Mr. Justice Lorigan in the case of Brown v. Sharp-Hauser Contracting Co., 159 Cal. 89, 112 Pac. 874, in the following terms:

"It is the duty of an employer to furnish a reasonably safe place in which the employee may perform the work in which he is engaged, and to use ordinary care to keep the place reasonably safe so that the employee may not be exposed to danger. It is true that the employer is not an insurer of the safety of the employee. The measure of his obligation is to use ordinary care in seeing that the place where the work is being done is safe in the first instance, and to employ the same degree of care in continuing to keep it safe. No liability is cast upon the employer to indemnify an employee for injuries which are the ordinary risks of the business in which he is employed. Where a person undertakes to work in a place where conditions of danger are liable to occur in the ordinary prosecution of the work; where he has knowledge of such dangers, or his facilities for seeing or discovering them are just as good as those of his employer, and he undertakes the employment, or continues in the work with the knowledge or opportunity for ascertaining those dangers, he is in law deemed to assume the perils incident to the employment, and cannot look to the employer for indemnification for injuries resulting therefrom. But this rule of assumption of risk has no application where the dangers are not obvious; where they are known to the employer and not to the employee, or where, in the exercise of ordinary care the conditions of peril might have been discovered and removed by the employer."

That the foregoing rule has special application to cases where the employee is engaged in doing work under the immediate direction of a foreman the authorities all agree. A quite recent and instructive case upon this subject is that of Bradford v. City of St. Joseph (Mo. App.) 214 S. W. 281, in certain incidents of its essential aspects identical with the case at bar, and wherein the Supreme Court of Missouri held that, when a foreman orders a lineman to climb a pole, it is the duty of the foreman, and not of the lineman, to inspect the pole in order to ascertain its condition as to soundness and safety; and that a lineman in obeying such direction cannot be held to have assumed risks which were not obvious, and of which he had no knowledge. Another instructive case touching the same subject and similar in its facts to the case at bar is that of Coal & Coke Ry. Co. v. Deal, 231 Fed. 604, 145 C. C. A. 490, wherein it was held that a lineman working under a foreman was entitled to rely upon the assurance of his foreman that there was no danger in the service which he was required to perform, and could not be deemed to have assumed the risk incident to his employment in obeying the orders of his master. This case is further instructive and decisive upon another feature of the case before us. The evidence herein discloses that, when the plaintiff was first informed as to the particular work to be done in the way of removing and resetting the poles in question he suggested to the foreman that "We ought to have our pike poles along;" to which the foreman replied, "We haven't got them; we will have to set them up without pike poles." The appellant insists that this evidence shows that the plaintiff was aware of the dangers attending the work, and hence assumed the risk incident thereto; but the court in the case last above cited, dealing with a similar situation, said:

"It is well settled that where an employee requests an overseer or superintendent to furnish additional tools or appliances in order to insure his safety, and the overseer or superintendent refuses to comply with such request but assures the employee that there is no danger in the service which he is required to perform, the employee, under such circumstances, will not be deemed to have assumed the risk incident to his employment."

The case last above cited was one arising under the federal Employer's Liability Act, by which it is conceded this case is also governed, and it is therein held that there is an implied obligation of the master, under his contract with those whom he employs, to use due care in supplying and maintaining suitable instrumentalities for the performance of the work or duty which he requires of them, and he is liable for damages occasioned by a neglect or omission to fulfill this obligation, whether it arises from his own want of care or that of his agents to whom he intrusts the duty, citing Seaboard A. L. Ry. Co. v. Horton, 233 U. S. 492, 34 Sup. Ct. 635, 58 L. Ed. 1062, L. R. A. 1916C, 1, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 475.

The cases cited by the appellant in support of his contention herein when examined are all found to relate to the assumption of risk where the danger is obvious or where the risks are the ordinary and known risks inherent in the nature of the work. The cases thus cited having special reference to linemen and other work of climbing poles are either cases where the linemen in doing the particular work to which in each case they were assigned were not under a foreman but were themselves charged with the duty of testing the safety of the particular poles to be ascended or else they were cases where the work to be done was that of removing poles known to be defective, and which were being replaced for that reason. Cases of this character have no application to the facts of the case at bar. The appellant in his closing brief concedes that "the pole was in a rotten and decayed condition; otherwise it would not have broken." The evidence fully discloses that this rotten and decayed condition of the pole was within the interior of the pole, and was covered and concealed by its outside shell, and was such as would not be disclosed by an exterior or superficial inspection of the pole. It could not in reason be claimed that this plaintiff, before climbing the pole, apparently sound, and which would not have fallen unless latently rotten, could be required to make such inner investigation as would be necessary to determine that the pole was sound at the heart. The duty of such investigation rested upon the employer or his agents in charge of the work. The foreman in this particular case was in a superior position in point of both knowledge and authority over the lineman. He had received the written history of the pole from his superior before proceeding with the work, he knew that it was the custom and duty of his employer to maintain and conduct a regular system of inspection of the poles of the corporation. He also was advised that the engineering department had only a few days before visited the scene and laid out the work to be done. He had, and he exercised, the authority to order this lineman to ascend this pole. The plaintiff had a right to rely upon the possession of this superior knowledge on the part of his foreman, and upon the fact that the latter's order and direction to climb the pole was based upon his assurance arising from his superior knowledge and position that "the pole was all right." He cannot, therefore, be held to have assumed a risk incident to a condition which was not obvious, but was unknown to him, and which he was assured by his foreman did not exist.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: TYLER, P. J.

WEST KEY NUMBER SYSTEM

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
3 1786 10046 8542

NATIONAL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY
SAN DIEGO

NON CIRCULATING